Sweet Home Alabama
 Where the skies are so blue
 Sweet Home Alabama
 Lord, I'm coming home to you
 Here I come Alabama
 — Lyrics from "Sweet Home Alabama"

There will be two teams very familiar with that 1973 Lynrd Skynyard classic by the time the NCAA Division II Football Championship is completed. Those two teams will indeed find a sweet home in Alabama upon arrival in Florence for the weekend of December 14.

The Shoals area of northwest Alabama, which includes Florence, will serve as host for the Division II championship game for the 17th consecutive year.

"Florence and the Shoals have been outstanding hosts for the game, which is evident by the game being played there for so many years," said Randy L. Buhr, assistant director of championships for the NCAA. "The teams and their fans are always shown the best in Southern Hospitality."

The championship atmosphere produced in the Shoals is one of the reasons the NCAA continues going back to the area. No other city has been the site of the Division II football title game longer than five years.

"Division II football will never be the same," Fort Valley State athletics director Doug Porter said after experiencing championship week as a member of the NCAA Division II Football Championship staff.

Providing the players, coaches and fans with a big-time atmosphere has been the goal for local committee members throughout the game's history in the Shoals.

"We want to treat them like they're special," said Grady Liles, chair of the Shoals National Championship committee. "And they are special because they are the best teams in Division II. We want them to always remember their time with us as a positive experience. Based on the comments we receive from the schools and fans when they go home, I think we've been pretty successful reaching our goal."

Braly Municipal Stadium in Florence, Alabama, has been the site of the NCAA Division II Football Championship game for the last 16 years.

To maximize the Shoals experience, there are some things fans should know as they prepare to support their team in Alabama.

There will be plenty to do and eat once you get in town; the first step is knowing a little something about the area known as the Shoals. Your destination is the northwest corner of Alabama and a metropolitan area of approximately 150,000 people in Colbert and Lauderdale counties. Florence is the largest city in the area with about 40,000 residents.

The two counties are separated by the Tennessee River, which happens to be one of the best spots in the country for small mouth bass and other treats for anglers.

The birthplace of the Tennessee Valley Authority (TVA), the country's largest publicly owned electricity operation, is in Muscle Shoals. Tusculumbia and Sheffield join Muscle Shoals and Florence to form the Quad Cities.

"Sweet Home Alabama" has its roots in the Shoals and is part of the area's rich music tradition. Hundreds of musical hits originated and were produced at the area's many recording studios.

You'll also find plenty of history. Among those are sites of numerous Civil War battles, a portion of the famed Trail of Tears route, birthplace of legendary Helen Keller and W.C. Handy, the Father of the Blues, and much more.

The next step for fans is to find the best way to get there. As a point of reference, the Shoals is about 125 miles south of Nashville, Tennessee, 120 miles northwest of Birmingham, Alabama, and 150 miles east of Memphis, Tennessee. Northwest Alabama Regional Airport in Muscle Shoals is served by Northwest Airlink with three daily flights. Other destinations by air are Huntsville, Alabama, which is 50 miles east of the Shoals, along with Birmingham and Nashville. Huntsville's airport is serviced by American, Delta, Continental, Northwest and other major airlines.

Car rentals in the Shoals are available through Avis (256/386-7368), Hertz (256/764-0881) or Enterprise (256/381-5606).

There are plenty of available lodging options, from the more recognizable chains like Holiday Inn, Days Inn, Jameson Inn and others, to a resort setting at Joe Wheeler State Park in nearby Rogersville, Alabama. Bed and breakfast accommodations are also available. Representatives from the Shoals Championship Committee will attend the semifinal games and provide a complete listing to the winning teams with contact numbers.

The teams will be staying at Holiday Inn and Webster Inn and Suites, both in the heart of the Shoals.

The participating teams arrive at Northwest Alabama Regional Airport in Muscle

Shoals on Thursday and are greeted by bands and dozens of residents to kick off game week festivities. Coaches and selected players are introduced to the media during a noon luncheon before heading to practice. There is a banquet for the teams later in the evening.

The teams are entertained Friday morning as well before becoming more focused on the game later in the day. Most teams have a pep rally at their hotels that night before meeting curfew.

"We look after them and make sure they have a good time," Liles said of the participating teams. "We have three people assigned to each team as hosts and they stay with them the entire time. We also try to take care of the parents, fans and school officials."

There are numerous attractions for visitors to enjoy while the teams are at work. Among those are:

- The Alabama Music Hall of Fame — Exhibits feature many talented Alabamians who have influenced the course of music history. A tour is a walk through the who's who in the music world. See exhibits of W.C. Handy, Nat "King" Cole, Hank Williams, Sam Phillips and the group Alabama. You can also experience the Muscle Shoals Sound or record your own hit in the recording studio.

- Helen Keller's Birthplace, Ivy Green — Helen Keller, "America's first lady of courage," was born in Tusculumbia, Alabama, where her memory is kept alive at her birthplace. It is also the site of the "Miracle Worker" play, which is held annually each June and July.

- W.C. Handy Birthplace, Museum and Library — W.C. Handy was born in Florence, November 16, 1873. The most complete collection in the world of Handy's personal papers and artifacts are housed in the museum. The library is a valuable resource center for African-American history and culture.

- Wilson Dam — Construction of Wilson Dam began in 1918 and was completed in 1924, becoming the first to produce hydro-electricity. TVA acquired the dam in 1933 after industrialist Henry Ford was unable to purchase it for use in his automobile manufacturing operation. It has one of the largest single-lift locks in the world. The Visitors Center is open for tours. Exhibits include the history of Wilson Dam, TVA, and how electricity is generated.

- Frank Lloyd Wright's Rosenbaum House — The house was completed in 1940 and is the only Frank Lloyd Wright-designed structure in the state of Alabama. It is also one of only 26 Usonian houses ever built in the United States.

- Indian Mound — This mound was built around 500 A.D. during the Woodland period. It is the largest domiciliary mound in the

Florence, Alabama, and "The Shoals" offer an abundance of entertainment options, including great fishing and football.

Tennessee Valley. An educational museum houses authentic artifacts dating back 10,000 years.

- Fishing — Wilson, Pickwick and Wheeler lakes offer a challenging experience and potential for the best fishing story you will ever tell. The quality of fishing attracts anglers nationwide. Largemouth and small mouth bass caught in area lakes have become trophies for many.

Friday during championship week is a big day in the Shoals. That night, the Harlon Hill Trophy and Division II Hall of Fame banquet at the Florence Conference Center attracts the attention of football enthusiasts nationwide. The public can attend the banquet with tickets costing $35 each or a table of eight for $280.

The Hill Trophy goes annually to the best player in Division II. Past Division II Hall of Fame inductees have included Walter Payton, John Stallworth, Harry Carson, Ken O'Brien and Brent Jones, among others. This year's inductees are Jessie Tuggle, Andre Reed and Scott Brunner.

If you prefer a parade, the annual Christmas parade will be held in Florence Friday night. Bands and cheerleaders from both participating teams are invited to participate.

This year's game is set for a 3 p.m. kickoff and will be televised live by ESPN. Fans should bring a variety of clothing and be prepared for temperatures ranging from the teens to the high 60s. The average high temperature in the Shoals for December is 52 degrees. However, the championship game has been played in three inches of snow and also in 60-degree weather. The late kickoff will ensure that the game will end after nightfall, which will likely make for cooler temperatures in the second half. Umbrellas are not allowed in the 14,215-seat Braly Stadium, so fans might want to plan accordingly in case of rain.

Shuttles will be available to the stadium from most area lodging facilities and from the University of North Alabama campus.

Tickets for the game are $15. Shoals representatives who attend the semifinal games will bring tickets to the game and turn them over to school officials, who will handle sales. Liles said ticket arrangements will be made to accommodate all visiting fans.

Game souvenirs will be available at the team hotels and at the stadium. The Shoals Chamber of Commerce is available to answer all other questions at 256/764-4661.

"We've had a lot of people bragging on us over the last 17 years, and we're going to continue to do it right," Liles said. "This is a big event for the Shoals and we want our visitors to know we appreciate them being here."

The NCAA: Where Everything Old Is New Again

New Leadership Is Only Part Of The Changes At The NCAA

NCAA

As the National Collegiate Athletic Association approaches its centennial in 2006, the theme for the Association these days is "Everything Old is New Again." If you're curious about what's new with the 96-year-old NCAA, the answer is plenty, including new leadership, a new emphasis on education and new championship coverage.

At the top of the list of "new" is the president-elect of the NCAA. Myles Brand, president of Indiana University, was chosen October 10 to become the fourth executive director or president of the Association in the last 51 years. The 60-year-old Brand was selected for the post of NCAA president from a group of three finalists. He will replace current president Cedric Dempsey, who announced his retirement in January and who will finish an eight-year term as the Association's chief executive director, January 1, 2003, when Brand takes over. Brand's contract runs through 2007.

During his tenure as NCAA president, Dempsey oversaw the relocation of the national office from Kansas City to Indianapolis, restructuring of the NCAA governance process to place authority for intercollegiate athletics in the hands of college presidents and negotiation of new contracts with CBS and ESPN that ensure the Association's financial stability for more than a decade.

For his part, the new president-elect didn't take long to set his theme for what his administration may become. At the press conference announcing his selection, Brand said: "The integrity of intercollegiate athletics is absolutely critical ... We must integrate intercollegiate athletics with [the] academic mission of universities and colleges. These are not separate missions with separate goals."

The integration of athletics and academics received a lift with the announcement in September of the latest graduation rates for student-athletes. For the first time since the federal government has been collecting graduation data and the NCAA began publishing the results a dozen years ago, student-athletes in Division I are achieving a 60 percent graduation rate. On average, student-athletes perform better in terms of graduation rates than the rest of the full-time student body.

Dr. Myles Brand

The rates were up in nearly every sport for both men and women and across ethnic lines. Male student-athletes in Division I are graduating at a rate of 54 percent (compared to 51 percent a year ago), and female student-athletes are graduating at a rate of 69 percent (the same as last year). Male student-athletes graduate slightly under their counterparts in the student body (54 percent compared to 56 percent), but female student-athletes graduate considerably better than women in the student body (69 percent compared to 61 percent).

New academic standards in Division I for both initial eligibility and continuing eligibility are expected to take effect next fall that will drive the graduation rates even higher. Although graduation rates in Divisions II and III also increased, the data collected by the federal government measure the rates only for student-athletes on scholarship, a distinction that misses the success of many student-athletes in those two divisions who compete without athletically related financial support.

There is increased support for Divisions II and III as well as Division I this year with the new CBS and ESPN contracts. These "bundled rights" agreements go beyond the traditional television rights agreements. Beginning with the new contracts with CBS and ESPN this fall, all 87 NCAA championships in 22 sports for men and women will receive coverage either through telecasts, cablecasts or the Internet. This is the first time in history that coverage is extended to every event from the first round through the championship.

The new contracts — 11-year deals with CBS and ESPN — will generate about $6.2 billion which will mean new revenue for the NCAA and member institutions. Based on the increased revenue from the new contracts, the NCAA budget for 2002-03 is $422 million, an increase of 22 percent over last year. What most college sports fans don't realize is that 94 cents of every dollar in the budget goes back to the membership in the form of direct dollar payments, support of the 87 championships and other events, and other goods and services.

Earmarked specifically for student-athletes are three programs totaling more than $44 million for this year alone. Included in the budgeted amounts are the continuation of an annual $10 million special assistance fund that helps needy student-athletes buy winter coats, tickets for emergency trips home or other personal needs. Also continuing is a $17 million academic enhancement fund that supports the educational needs of student-athletes, and new this year is a $17 million student-athlete opportunity fund. Over the course of the 11-year contract with CBS and ESPN, the NCAA will earmark more than three-quarters of a billion dollars for student-athletes.

There's plenty of new things going on at the NCAA. Not bad for an organization about to celebrate its 100th birthday.

There Is More To The NCAA Than You Might Think

Of course the NCAA is known for its championships. Unless you've been surviving on a deserted island and have yet to be voted off, you've at least heard of the NCAA Sweet 16™, The Big Dance™ or The Final Four®.

"Almost everyone you meet knows there is a Men's and a Women's Final Four. But I think that's where the familiarity stops," says Tom Jacobs, director of championships. "Much of the general public would be surprised to know the NCAA sponsors 85 other championships. And just a few could name all 22 sports in which we conduct championships."

Even if most people can't name all the sports, these NCAA-sponsored events bring more to the communities than zealous fans with banners and painted faces. They also bring the opportunity of a lifetime for children.

The NYSP initiative is a five-week program conducted on 190 college campuses.

A chance to work drills with a national coach, to talk to top college athletes about their dreams and to find out that the books come first and the ball comes second are just a few of the possibilities for the youngsters who take part in the NCAA's YES® (Youth Education through Sports) Clinics. The free clinics, held in conjunction with many of the NCAA's national championships, join top collegiate coaches and athletes with young children in the community.

Each year, the NCAA dedicates more than $2 million to youth education programs.

Instead of relying on championship tournament opportunities alone to reach children, the NCAA also goes directly to them. The NCAA, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services and the U.S. Department of Agriculture work together to support the National Youth Sports Program (NYSP). This is a five-week program conducted on more than 190 college and university campuses across the country. Built around the NYSP's basic foundation that all children deserve the experiences and friendships that a summer sport camp can bring, this program combines athletic know-how with important life skills.

"Youth programs supported by the NCAA target students from 10 to 18 years old," says Ron Stratten, NCAA vice-president for education services. "They are young people who have a chance to go left or go right. We would like to see them go right — in sports and into the positive aspects of life."

The price tag for the five-week program is budget-friendly for the participants. It's free. Through local donations, financial assistance from the NCAA and grants from the federal government, approximately 70,000 children each year learn about academics, athletics, nutrition and career planning without mom and dad having to worry about the price tag.

To drive home the importance of academics, many colleges invite professional and collegiate athletes to speak to the groups. And the kids are often surprised by what they hear.

It's an important message no matter what the age. It is by no mistake that the folks at the NCAA only refer to their athletes as "student-athletes." The student is first. Athletics is secondary.

That's because if athletes are banking on having a professional sports career, the NCAA knows that the odds are against them:

- Only 1.3 percent of NCAA male basketball players make it to the pros;
- Only 2.0 percent of NCAA football players make it to the NFL;
- Only 1.0 percent of NCAA female basketball players make it to the pros;
- Only 5.6 percent of high school baseball players make it to an NCAA team.

With this uphill climb to the pros that only a few make, it is important that today's college student-athletes are prepared for the course work that awaits them when they get off the field or court. They also need to be prepared for life outside of sports after graduation.

"We try to make sure that the student-athletes get the things they need so they come out of the university a balanced person, not just a person who is bigger and stronger because of athletics," says Stratten. "Our mission continues to be to keep higher education and athletics close."

Enter the CHAMPS/Life Skills Program described by an NCAA staff member as a "Life 101" course. This new program helps the high school student make a seamless transition to college. Since its beginning in 1994, the program has grown by leaps and bounds. An average of 50 universities adopt the program every year.

Each NCAA school tailors the CHAMPS/Life Skills Program to meet the needs of its own student-athletes. While each university's CHAMPS/Life Skills Program may be different, each has the same goal — to help student-athletes achieve a positive collegiate experience.

NCAA Decision Makers

You May Be Surprised Who They Really Are

"NCAA fines university." "NCAA declares student-athlete ineligible."

With headlines like those hitting the papers, and in a society where bad news perhaps gets more attention than good news, it's easy to conclude that the NCAA acts as judge and jury when it comes to college athletics.

"When people hear 'NCAA,' they think power. But this Association itself has no power whatsoever that isn't granted by the member institutions," says Danita Edwards, NCAA vice-president of public affairs.

Perhaps the most simplistic way to explain who the bosses are is to say that administrators at roughly 1,000 colleges and universities actually write NCAA rules. In 1997, university presidents and chancellors were put in key positions within the NCAA governing framework so that they, or their institutions, are the ones who adopt new rules and regulations. It also means that they have to be acutely aware of what is happening in their own athletics department as well as those of their peers.

Giving the power to the key decision makers on campus gives the colleges, universities and conferences the power to make decisions that will positively impact present and future student-athletes.

"It's not the NCAA staff that makes the rules," says Dan Boggan, NCAA senior vice-president. "The NCAA staff members enforce the rules the institutions make. We are an organization that supports NCAA colleges and universities by implementing the policies, legislation and rules that they write for themselves."

Essentially, there are three levels to the NCAA governing structure. University athletics directors and faculty athletics representatives make up the Management Council that evaluates the issues from a campus level. If this group determines that there is a need for change, it proposes the idea to the university presidents and chancellors who make up the Board of Directors (or Presidents Council as it is referred to in Divisions II and III). Based on merit, the idea may ultimately make its way to the top tier of decision makers, the Executive Committee, which is made up of members of the Board of Directors and Presidents Council from all three divisions.

"My typical response to people who are questioning a decision that is made about their school is that they need to talk to their university and find out what role they played in putting the rule in place. Because often times, their own school may have voted in favor of the rule in question," says Boggan.

The universities and athletics departments are not guided by the NCAA, as may be the perception. Instead you could really say that the NCAA is guided by them.
