Did You Know?

Ten facts about the NCAA

1. Almost 95 cents of every dollar the NCAA generates is distributed to NCAA member colleges and universities.

Schools receive this revenue through grants, postgraduate scholarships, programs for student-athletes, championship competition, leadership conferences, degree-completion programs and more. The remaining revenue is used to provide an administrative infrastructure for college sports. NCAA members fund scholarships for their student-athletes.

2. The NCAA helps future student-athletes prepare for college.

The NCAA provides many resources to help the prospective student-athlete prepare for college. The NCAA is committed to academics and requires prospective student-athletes to be better prepared for the challenges of academics at the collegiate level by taking more core courses (English, science, math, etc.) before entering college. Check out www.NCAAstudent.org for additional information, including:

- The Guide for the College-Bound Student-Athlete.
- Recruiting definitions and guidelines to protect student-athletes in the recruiting process and to ensure a fair recruiting process.

3. The NCAA has its own blog.

Log on to www.doubleazone.com to read about and comment on all the issues going on in the NCAA.

4. The people appearing in televised NCAA public service announcements (PSAs) are REAL former student-athletes.

Be sure to read the bottom of the screen during the PSA to see what sport they played. And remember — there are more than 380,000 NCAA student-athletes and most of them go pro in something other than sports.

5. The NCAA has a long championship history.

The first NCAA championship was held in 1921 for the sport of track and field. The first women's NCAA championship was field hockey in 1982. Before 1982, the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) administered the women's championships.

6. There is a process for how referees are assigned.

The NCAA is responsible for developing and publishing the playing rules in a number of college sports. However, officiating is not within the purview of the Association. All regular-season officiating is handled through the various conference offices. The conference offices hire, train, assign and evaluate officials in all sports. These evaluations are then used to select officials to officiate championship events, which the NCAA coordinates.

7. The NCAA established a partnership with Habitat for Humanity, the NCAA Home Team, in response to 2005 hurricane damage to the Gulf Coast.

In the wake of the disastrous 2005 hurricane season, the NCAA committed to help those affected by forming a three-year partnership with Habitat for Humanity International. To date, the NCAA Home Team has built more than 25 homes with the help of more than 1,000 student-athletes and athletics administrators. For videos and news about the builds, go to www.ncaa.org.

8. Student-athletes have a voice in the NCAA.

The NCAA is committed to the student-athlete experience. NCAA legislation requires all member schools to have Student-Athlete Advisory Committees (SAACs). In addition, there are separate national SAACs for Divisions I, II and III. These committees are made up of student-athletes who provide insight on the student-athlete experience and ways to improve it, including the rules, policies and regulations that affect student-athletes.

9. The NCAA is a membership-led organization.

The NCAA governance structure is made up of more than 125 committees. In democratic fashion, these committees are comprised of representatives from member schools such as athletic directors, faculty, coaches and even presidents and chancellors. These committees study proposals and make recommendations to ensure academic achievement and fair, safe and equitable competition.

10. The NCAA has its own “dance of legislation.”

Much as political legislation is passed in Washington, D.C., and across America, the NCAA has its own legislative process. In Division I, designated conference representatives vote on the rules for the schools in that conference, while schools in Divisions II and III each have one vote. In all cases, potential legislation is put forth, studied and then voted on. Once again, the national office plays a leading role in the legislative process but the NCAA is truly governed by its member schools.

The NCAA and Habitat for Humanity International teamed up to help build six homes in partnership with families in Pensacola, Florida, at the 2006 NCAA Division II National Championships Festival. Participating student-athletes helped frame the homes.

The most valuable players are the ones who graduate.

Q&A with the NCAA President

Myles Brand addresses hot topics in collegiate athletics

NCAA President Myles Brand is the first university president to lead the Association. Brand became the fourth president of the NCAA on January 1, 2003.

What is your response to critics who point to the big-time revenue sports and say student-athlete academic reform will never happen?

First, I'd say they are dead wrong. The fact is student-athletes graduate at higher rates than the general student body in almost every demographic. But we're not naïve enough to believe that we shouldn't do more. We know we have academic challenges, especially in the aggregate for football, men's basketball and baseball. In response, we have taken steps to identify the issues impacting academic achievement and have or will be putting forth sport-specific approaches for improvement. But let's give credit where credit is due, especially for African-American student-athletes. When you compare the graduation success rates of African-American football and male basketball student-athletes with that of the general African-American male college population, the student-athletes do better by 12 points in football and five points in basketball. In fact, African-American student-athletes of both sexes do considerably better than their general student body counterparts in the classroom. Big picture, there is no doubt we as a nation need to do a better job of graduating African-Americans and all minorities but when it comes to athletics, we have made genuine academic progress.

What is the Academic Progress Rate and why is it getting so much publicity?

We've been sharpening the edge on academic reform for several years. For example, in Division I, our new tougher initial-eligibility standards mean incoming freshmen are better prepared for college class work. Our new enhanced progress toward degree requirement mandates steady academic advancement or the loss of eligibility for the student-athlete. As part of ongoing academic reform, we developed new metrics to accurately assess academic performance, one of which is the Academic Progress Rate. It's a snapshot-in-time tool focusing on the term-by-term academic performance of individual Division I teams. It's calculated at the end of each academic year and it is based on the eligibility and retention of scholarship student-athletes. If teams don't achieve the benchmark 925 score, penalties range from loss of scholarships to postseason restrictions to restricted Division I membership for a school's entire athletic department. But there is lots of good APR news. More than 98 percent of Division I teams are meeting the 925 benchmark and 839 teams have been recognized for having APRs in the top 10 percent of their sport. For those teams and institutions with APR challenges, the NCAA has made clear it is willing to work with them on academic recovery programs. In the past, the Association tended to apply its rules rigidly without exception. Now we place fairness in a priority position. That demands we look carefully at the situation, that we give student-athletes the benefit of the doubt and that we focus on improvement rather than punishment. Our goal is to change behavior. We want student-athletes to succeed academically and we will issue sanctions only when it is necessary, right and fair.

You are on record as saying it is absolutely critical to integrate collegiate sports into higher education. Is that even possible in today's mega-dollar sports world?

Yes! In fact, it's happening every day at hundreds of campuses across the nation. Remember that so-called "mega-dollar" sports programs by and large exist where there are "mega-dollar" institutions of higher education. Athletics budgets in Division I, on average, range from 3.5 to 4.5 percent of their institutional budgets. Whether it is a big-name Division I institution or a small school at the Division III level, there is a wonderful give-and-take being played out. The mission is the same for intercollegiate athletics as for the rest of higher education — educate students. Student-athletes are learning and growing from classroom and competitive experiences. At the same time, schools and fans are given the wonderful opportunity to cheer their favorite teams and student-athletes. Intercollegiate athletics is a success story. More than that, it is a deeply embedded national cultural phenomenon. There is no other country in the world where higher education, the love of sport and loyalty to an alma mater come together quite like they do in America.

Speaking of big bucks, what does the NCAA do with all the money it makes?

NCAA championships are the heart and soul of intercollegiate athletics and its biggest revenue generator. Critics mistakenly believe the NCAA coffers are overflowing. In reality, almost 95 percent of every dollar we generate goes back to our members to fund nonrevenue sports, to provide academic support for student-athletes and to fund the various welfare, youth and insurance programs that benefit student-athletes. We're a nonprofit organization that spends less than five percent of our revenue on general and administrative expenses and we're quite proud of that. It takes money to run 88 championships in 23 sports for 53,000 participants across three divisions. We don't apologize for how we generate funding, or how we spend it. Instead, we're an association that prides itself on helping more than 380,000 student-athletes earn a priceless and well-rounded higher educational experience. That is something we all benefit from.

Balance and Learning

Defining Division II

Division II has developed a comprehensive strategic positioning platform formed through extensive research of Division II student-athletes, administrators and fans. That platform is based on the foundation of "Life in the Balance" and emphasizes both academic excellence and athletics achievement.

Six attributes define Division II — Learning, Balance, Resourcefulness, Sportsmanship, Passion and Service.

Balance

Division II is dedicated to fostering achievement on the field, in the classroom and in the community. By integrating high-level athletics competition into the traditional college experience, Division II gives student-athletes the tools to succeed far beyond college.

Quality Competition

Each year, more than 84,000 Division II student-athletes compete in 25 NCAA sports. In recognition of this first-rate competition, CSTV showcases nearly 100 Division II regular-season games every year. Division II semifinal and championship events are regularly broadcast on CBS, CSTV, ESPN, ESPNU and ESPN2.

Division II prides itself on providing unique athletics and educational opportunities. With no common-age rule, the division welcomes many student-athletes who have returned to school later in life, reflecting the mission of many Division II institutions of providing access to higher education for varied populations. Division II also provides opportunities to student-athletes who have previously competed in organized competition, even at the professional level, depending on each unique situation.

Community Leadership

Community leadership is an integral component of Division II.

To illustrate this commitment, Division II gave the lead gift — $1 million — to the NCAA Home Team, the NCAA partnership with Habitat for Humanity International formed in response to 2005 hurricanes in the Gulf Coast. Since then, Division II members, including many student-athletes, have helped build homes.

The Division II Student-Athlete Advisory Committee also has overseen a national fundraising effort for the Make-A-Wish Foundation, a national organization that creates special experiences for children with life-threatening illnesses. Since the launch of the initiative in 2003-04, Division II has raised about $500,000 for Make-A-Wish.

Academic Integration

In Division II, competitive athletics are fully integrated within the institution. Few Division II athletics programs are financially self-sustaining. Rather, they are funded like any other department within the institution and serve to advance the institutional mission.

Only a small percentage of Division II student-athletes receive full athletics scholarships. Most depend on academic scholarships, student loans, employment or other aid — similar to other college students. This balance defines Division II; providing opportunities while valuing student-athletes for more than their athletics participation.

Division II also works to create an environment conducive to academic success for its student-athletes by scheduling local and regional opponents, minimizing time away from the classroom.

Learning

Division II helps equip student-athletes with the knowledge necessary to succeed — in the classroom and beyond graduation.

Academic Success Rate

The Academic Success Rate (ASR) is a measure of scholastic achievement unique to Division II. Unlike federal graduation rates, the ASR takes into account transfer and non-athletics scholarship student-athletes. The first ASR numbers, released in 2006, reported graduation rates of nearly 70 percent. The graduation rate of Division II student-athletes is consistently 10 to 15 percentage points higher than that of the general student body.

24-Hour and Six-Hour Rules

Student-athletes competing in Division II are required to make year-by-year and term-by-term progress toward graduation. In order to remain eligible, six hours of degree credit must be completed during the previous semester or quarter and a minimum of 24 hours in the previous academic year. These requirements ensure that all student-athletes are regularly progressing toward a degree.

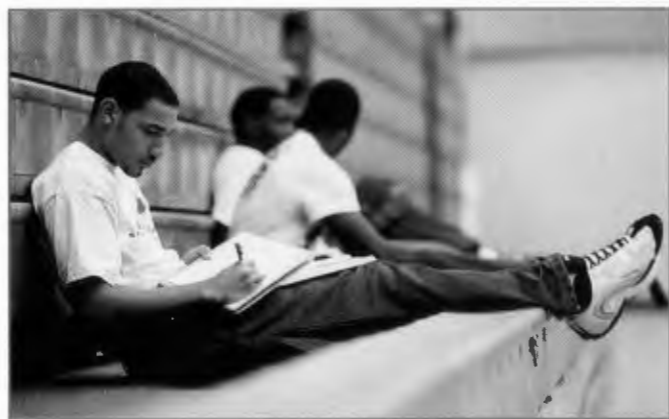

Division II Degree-Completion Scholarship Program

Division II cares about the academic success of all student-athletes — including when their playing days are over. The Division II Degree-Completion Scholarship Program provides financial aid to student-athletes who are just short of graduating but have exhausted their eligibility. Since its inception in 2001, the program has given more than $1.2 million in aid to nearly 400 students.

There are as many individual reasons to join a Division II school as there are students, coaches, professors and alumni. All our stories are united by the six characteristics that define a Division II experience.

This is why we chose Division II.

Whether studying for an exam before practice on the bleachers or working on calculus problems on the bus, student-athletes make academics a priority — no matter what the setting or how demanding the schedule.

Passion and Service

Defining Division II

Division II has developed a comprehensive strategic positioning platform formed through extensive research of Division II student-athletes, administrators and fans. That platform is based on the foundation of "Life in the Balance" and emphasizes both academic excellence and athletics achievement.

Six attributes define Division II — Learning, Balance, Resourcefulness, Sportsmanship, Passion and Service.

Passion

The passion for championship competition is evident in Division II philosophy and in practice.

Unique to Division II is a commitment to national championships festivals where several championships are conducted simultaneously at the same site. The inaugural festival was held in Orlando in 2004 when student-athletes in men's and women's golf, women's lacrosse, softball and men's and women's tennis vied for national titles. In November 2006, Pensacola, Florida, played host to 760 student-athletes who competed in men's and women's cross country, women's field hockey, men's and women's soccer and women's volleyball. Houston will host the second spring festival in 2008 and a winter festival is being considered for a future date.

Division II provides student-athletes with the most access to championships competition of the three NCAA divisions, offering one championship opportunity for every 6.24 student-athletes.

Equal championship opportunities for males and females is important to Division II. In 2005-06, 51.6 percent of participants in Division II championships were male and 48.4 percent were female.

The Division II philosophy includes a commitment to regional competition. Division II colleges and universities are encouraged to schedule games close to home and discouraged from cross-country travel for regular-season matchups. As a result, Division II schools have lower travel costs and the student-athletes spend more time in the classroom.

Service

Division II student-athletes and administrators believe in the importance of getting involved both inside of the NCAA structure and beyond.

Each July, the Division II Management Council and the national Student-Athlete

A Division II student-athlete participates in one of several activities conducted at the 2006 NCAA Division II National Championships Festival in Pensacola.

Advisory Committee meet to discuss legislation and other happenings within the division.

Division II gave the lead gift — $1 million — to the NCAA Home Team, the NCAA partnership with Habitat for Humanity International formed in response to the 2005 hurricanes in the Gulf Coast. Since then, Division II members, including many student-athletes, have helped build homes in support of the Gulf Coast rebuilding effort. At the 2006 Division II National Championships Festival in Pensacola, Florida, Division II conducted a major Habitat build, helping with construction of six houses.

The Division II Student-Athlete Advisory Committee has undergone a national fundraising effort for the Make-A-Wish Foundation, a national organization that creates special experiences for children with life-threatening illnesses. Since the launch of the initiative in 2003-04, Division II has raised about $500,000 for Make-A-Wish.

Sportsmanship and Resourcefulness

Defining Division II

Division II has developed a comprehensive strategic positioning platform formed through extensive research of Division II student-athletes, administrators and fans. That platform is based on the foundation of "Life in the Balance" and emphasizes both academic excellence and athletics achievement.

Six attributes define Division II — Learning, Balance, Resourcefulness, Sportsmanship, Passion and Service.

Sportsmanship

Sportsmanship is defined by respect for fairness, courtesy and ethical conduct toward others. Through the combination of highly principled, competitive student-athletes and a commitment to community engagement, Division II has a renewed image of sportsmanship and of the overall environment in which Division II athletics events are conducted.

Division II extends its responsibility of sportsmanship to the families, friends and fans of the student-athletes. The emphasis on community engagement and the desire to create events that are appropriate for family entertainment have led Division II institutions to enhance the overall environment at Division II events. Eradicating the effects of abusive

Chemistry is not only a term used to describe a team's cohesion; student-athletes participate in chemistry and science courses, working in laboratories with professors and peers. Laboratory courses provide hands-on experience for student-athletes, putting the textbook into reality.

Sportsmanship Statement

The Division II Student-Athlete Advisory Committee developed the following sportsmanship statement that was provided on a banner to all Division II institutions and was incorporated into an advertisement that can be used in all game programs.

We know that we are role models.

We respect our teammates, our opponents, our game and those who support it.

We strive to create a family-friendly environment during our contests.

We seek a partnership with our community.

As Division II student-athletes, we commit to sportsmanship and ethical conduct by demonstrating fair play, responsibility and respect.

We invite you to support our effort.

A message from the Division II Student-Athlete Advisory Committee language and overly aggressive behavior, both on the part of fans and participants, is central to the sportsmanship initiative.

Division II is committed to creating an environment where sportsmanship is valued. A subcommittee within the governance structure will work with college presidents, conference commissioners, the NCAA Committee on Sportsmanship and Ethical Conduct, athletics administrators, coaches, student-athletes, parents and officials to create ways to enhance the environment at Division II events.

Resourcefulness

Resourcefulness is a Division II brand attribute reflecting its student-athletes as multit talented, diverse individuals.

Each year, Division II receives 4.37 percent of all NCAA revenue, as guaranteed by the NCAA constitution. For 2006-07, Division II received $24.6 million. With its accumulated surplus of $17.4 million, Division II's operational funding for 2006-07 totaled slightly more than $42 million.

Striving to maintain balance and skillfulness in its student-athletes' lives, Division II uses its modern strategic plan to guide its expenditures. The total expenses for 2006-07 equaled $31 million and were allocated to six different areas including: Division II championships, membership distributions and grant programs, funding to promote Division II strategic positioning, championships and regular-season television, staff support, and other programs and funds.

Another resourceful initiative is the conference grant program that makes it possible for member conferences to direct significant financial resources toward their local needs. These funds are distributed by the conferences and can be used for a variety of needs including academic counselors, computer labs, study-hall monitors, ensuring diversity and assisting the Student-Athlete Advisory Committees.

Division II provides funding to assist student-athletes who have exhausted their athletics eligibility in completing their degrees.

The Leadership Action Academies provide student-athletes, administrators and coaches with the opportunity to enhance their leadership skills and to become more familiar with Division II issues.

The NCAA is also committed to exposing the talents of Division II student-athletes through its unique arrangement with College Sports Television. CSTV provides live coverage of 81 regular-season football and basketball events — nine on national television and the other 72 on Internet broadband.

There are as many individual reasons to join a Division II school as there are students, coaches, professors and alumni. All our stories are united by the six characteristics that define a Division II experience.

This is why we chose Division II.
