Two lost in possible plane crash

By MARK MCLEAN
Staff Writer

A major air and ground search for two missing women, one a CWU junior, has failed to turn up any leads to their whereabouts since the plane they were piloting was reported overdue at the Ellensburg airport last Thursday afternoon.

Lisa Brockett, 21, a transfer student from the Big Bend Community College flight program, and her former Big Bend flight instructor, Christine Karstetter, left Midstate Aviation about 11:30 a.m. Thursday in a rented Cessna 150 for what was expected to be a brief pleasure flight.

The flight was expected to be short since Brockett was scheduled to work at a local law firm at 1 p.m. that afternoon. Likewise, Karstetter was supposed to have lunch at 1 p.m. with a friend before driving back to Seattle where she worked as a corporate pilot. Consequently, as is normal for "sightseeing" flights, no flight plan was filed.

"This is the first time in many years we've had one (a search) of this size," said Mac McIver, search director of the Washington Division of Aeronautics about the search for the two missing women.

Officials have been concentrating the search area to within 50 miles of Ellensburg since they believe it was a local pleasure flight. This left an area of about 4,000 square miles to be searched.

"There is just so much territory up there," said CWU junior Garth Marlow, "you could have flown over them hundreds of times." Marlow spent about 14 hours in search planes over the weekend.

Over 40 private and Civil Air Patrol aircraft from around the state and even a few from Idaho and Oregon participated in the search over the weekend. In addition, Army helicopters from the Yakima Firing Center and an Air Force helicopter from Fairchild AFB also participated in the search, officials said.

Officials also reported that over 125 people participated in the search effort as pilots, observers or in ground support capacities. Among the volunteers were CWU flight technology majors and Air Force ROTC cadets.

Also among those searching were family members of both women. Dick Karstetter, Christine's father, expressed optimism Sunday and told reporters how he and his daughter had talked about survival by digging under a snow bank to keep warm. He also felt sure his daughter had food as she always carried granola or candy bars with her. He summed up his anxiety for his daughter saying, "She's out there someplace and freezing.... If she's alive."

Search and Rescue Coordinator for the Kittitas County Sheriff's Department Jan Tweedie said that the searchers had received about

Student Lobby fighting for student's needs

By LIONEL G. CAMPOS
Staff Writer

With the Washington State Legislative Session now underway, the Washington Student Lobby is hard at work getting state representatives to listen to the needs of university students.

The WSL hires student lobbyists to do internships at the legislative session in Olympia. While there, the students share with the state representatives the needs of college students.

"What we are asking for," said Ellen Nolan, WSL representative, "are the basic needs of students."

Nolan explained that state representatives and senators listen to the student lobbyist because they are credible sources with first hand experience.

"We'll never be a strong lobby group, like the ones with big bucks," Nolan said, "but we are very credible, we're persistent, and we are very effective."

The needs the WSL are pushing for range from increases in funding of the state student financial aid programs to changing the definition of a full-time student for tuition paying purposes.

The WSL hopes the state will increase the amount of funding going to student financial aid programs, with a greater emphasis on grants and less emphasis on loans.

"Because of all the cuts Reagan made, there is hardly any federal financial aid available," said Nolan. She explained that the WSL is asking for a greater state emphasis on grants to help prevent students from falling to far in debt in order to pay for their college education.

Increased stipends for teacher's assistants and research assistants is also on the WSL's list of priorities. Nolan says that since the faculty is proposing a 15 percent pay increase, a two percent increase for TAs and RAs is not justified. Thus, the WSL is lobbying for a more equitable pay increase.

Realizing the university does not function on the faculty alone, besides lobbying for their increased salaries, the WSL is also lobbying for increased salaries of the staff and administration.

"This is in our interest," Nolan said, "because it gets us a better education."

Changing the definition of a full-time student to 12 or more credit hours is also on the agenda. Nolan said that at other colleges, students are required to pay full tuition for taking a lesser class load.

The funding of campus day care facilities is also an issue.

"One of the main social problems is single parents, or parents with children, completing their education," Nolan said, "because child care is not available or it is too expensive for them to try and get an education."

You're wrong, Bennett: many students are divested

By ERIC LUNDBERG
Scene Editor

Bennett. William J. Bennett to be exact. Shame on you students that are not familiar with this name. William, or Bill, which I'm sure his buddy in the Oval Office calls him, is one of the main reasons that the lines at the financial aid office never seem to grow shorter as the days go by.

Ever since being appointed as the Secretary of Education, William Bennett has sworn to cut funding for college students as much as the biggest budget cutter of all time, Ronald Reagan, deems necessary.

Budgets get chopped every year and funds are, indeed, short. This is a fact of life in the America of the 1980's. Maybe what seems so unfair to me is the way Bennett seems intent on portraying the average college student to the rest of the nation.

Divestiture. The American Heritage Dictionary defines the word: To strip. Bennett believes it is a word that college students in this country need to learn. "Stereo divestiture, new car divestiture, three weeks on the beach divestiture are what college students today must practice," the Secretary states. Instead of a great resource of this nation, Bennett has succeeded in describing today's college student as the villain in the battle to balance the budget.

Secretary Bennett is not content to stop the attack there. He was asked to speak at the 300th anniversary of Harvard University, and returned the favor by lambasting the student body for thinking of themselves as, "elite." If I attended any Ivy League school, I sure as hell would not hang my head in shame.

More than one person on Capitol Hill has stated publicly that Bennett talks a good fight, but does little to sit at the table and try to come up with workable solutions to today's problems confronting education, public and private. As for giving up my stereo, car, and three weeks on the beach, I have a clock radio, I walk, and I spend my breaks in Eastern Washington working two jobs.

On October 17, 1986, President Reagan signed legislation coming out of Bennett's department requiring students with no hope of receiving financial aid (but needing a Guaranteed Student Loan), to fill out the FAF (Financial Aid Form). The reasoning behind it is twofold. One, to see if the student's parents could afford to send the student to college without the loan, and two, to create more paperwork to discourage students from borrowing money in the first place.

As usual, this action hits the middle class the hardest. Parents who can conceivably send their child to college, at the expense of divesting what few perks they enjoy, will be asked to do so for the better part of five years. Our Direc-

Salary cap proposed for big wigs

To the Editor:

How many, do you think, of the university's top nine money-makers know what "Docendo Discimus" (the words on the school crest) means? I asked President Garrity and he had to guess. With a talented, cooperative faculty, what need would we have for (illiterate?) administrators? Maybe we could convert the President's house into housing for the Douglas Honors College and let them run things.

I want to put a ceiling of 50 grand on salaries and save $93,000 or put some teeth in our motto's bite and spread some pay raises around amongst our faculty. Who do I talk to without getting laughed at? I want to make this $50,000 salary limit a reality.

Signed,
Ryan Clark

Editor's Note: Docendo Discimus, CWU's school motto, means, "Through teaching we learn."

Bikers and walkers on the mall

To the Editor:

In response to Paul Brashear's editorial, "The Mall Problem is Walkers, Not Bikers":

On one point, I have to agree with you: walkers don't always walk in a straight line. But I've found from my experiences of riding a bike on the mall between classes, that if I ride fairly slowly and watch where I am going, that I don't mow anyone down in midstride, and I also get where I am going much faster than if I were walking.

Is there a law that says that everyone on the mall must walk in a straight line? No. Oh, but there is a law that sets the speed limit on the mall at five mph. I'm sure that you, Mr. Brashear, are not one of those bike riders that feel that the speed limit doesn't pertain to him.

Reading your editorial, I was struck by the selfish attitude you display throughout the article. Reread your first paragraph: "One could imagine the whole point of owning a twelve-speed touring bicycle is to get to and from classes quickly. My complaint is that you walkers get in my way."

Do you think that no one besides you is in a hurry to get to class? I guess that in an ideal world, there wouldn't be any walkers on the mall, so you could get to class just as fast as you wanted. But this is the real world, Paul. You can't have everything you want.

Signed,
Erin Rants

The mall doesn't have to be the Central 500

To the Editor:

This letter is pertaining to the December 4 editorial issue. The article was written by Paul Brashear, stating it is the class of walkers (if there is such) that is the problem in the mall. I wanted to respond immediately after the first paragraph. I feel someone may believe what has been said. The conclusion was for people to walk in a straight line. It would seem odd for someone to walk other than. Could you imagine a person that doesn't walk straight. We would be snakeish in nature. If I may speak obviously, what you are seeing is many people walking from different directions. If they turn to a class, who should be at blame. Of course it is not my fault, that happens to be where my class is. Who should we blame? It's the darn school's fault. Yeah, it must be them. They let me pick a hall being unaware of where and when others have class.

Let's find a solution to this problem. As I had read in previous issues there have been a couple of collisions with bikers and pedestrians. This may take a little smarts, but you know that can hurt if you are walking. Let's go on and say the solution has to be the elimination of one or the other. The bikers or the walkers. Let's go ahead and eliminate all the walkers and call the mall the Central 500. Isn't it just a matter of courtesy?

Students have responsibility to keep library quiet

To the Editor:

After reading the editorial in The Observer about excessive noise in the library, I agreed with most of the facts that Hugh Carney presented. I agree that the environment in the library is supposed to be "quiet and studious," but that is not always the situation found there. I may have a little more insight into these noisy disturbances for I'm one of the library staff that has been hired to control this very situation.

When I was hired by the library for the position of building monitor, I was told that the job description would entail "controlling food, noise, and beverage disturbances." Many of you have probably have had one of us monitors come up to you and ask if you'd be a little quieter, or to kindly dispose of that can of pop that you're drinking. There is a large sign as you enter the library that states "no food or beverage allowed," and yet there are those of you who seem to not be able to read!

Mr. Carney seems to think that it is an easy chore to quiet down an entire floor of people when he says that "many of the library staff seem unwilling to talk to the noisy people," and that we should have "please be quiet signs" posted. I think that it is totally your own responsibility to ask that person who is gabbing next to you to hush up! When someone is noisy, the next table must then talk a little louder, and so on until the domino effect has taken over an entire floor and people end up shouting just to be heard.

The solution is simple. Be responsible and treat your neighbor as you'd wish to be treated if you were studying for an important test. Utilize the library for what it's there for — a study area for those people who need to research papers and do their homework, not their socializing.

David Heap

Screaming Trees are too hip for words

To the Editor:

Walt Hampton's review was outright rude.

Screaming Trees are not a bunch of high school performers. The youngest member is 19 and already out of high school (in case you don't know and obviously, you don't).

In live performances, they sound too hip for words.

How could you say Gary Lee can't play guitar? He wrote the songs. Obviously, you have no taste and no ear for music.

The Trees are already on their second pressing of their "Clairvoyance" album, have toured the west coast and have albums clear to Europe. They also have a tape out ("Other Worlds") and have a second album coming out between spring and summer.

To me, all you're doing in this review (if you want to call it that) is ranking on each member. You don't even mention the songs.

Personally, I really don't think you know what your talking about.

I'm sure this experience was good for you, and you may become a real journalist in time, but as for this review, it really sucks!

Cola choice is a matter of money

To the Editor:

This is in response to a recent letter to the Editor (December 4, 1986) regarding the sale of Coca-Cola products on Central's campus.

The sale of soft drink products on campus is based on several different contracts that are put out for bid according to Washington State Law. These contracts vary in length and include fountain sales, vending machine sales, and retail sales. Criteria for the awarding of the contract include cost of product, estimated usage, availability of equipment and service.

Coca-Cola was awarded the current contract for fountain sales. Pepsi, however, does hold the contract for retail sales and their products are sold in the SUB Games Room and University Store.

This should make evident that the required procedures have been followed and business decisions have resulted. Of course, student preference is a concern but not on equal par with an administrator's concern. No individual is responsible for the presence of one soda pop over another.

Clarification of and further information is available from the Purchasing Office, located on the second floor of Mitchell Hall.

Signed,
Dan Layman
SUB Food Service Manager

Did you know?

This quarters enrollment is about 6,875 full-time students.

About 5,000 students live ON campus.

The ratio of men to women students is about 49 percent men, to 51 percent women.

SERC fights educational barriers

By TIFFANY McCUTCHEON
Staff Writer

Students interested in preserving their educational rights can join Students' Educational Rights Caucus (SERC), a new club on campus. Patricia Wentz, president of SERC, said that the organization is for students who are concerned about achieving their higher education degrees despite barriers.

"The barriers are not necessarily just financial. They can also be things like physical handicaps or social barriers," said Wentz. "By social barriers, I mean such things as age, race or sex." SERC is primarily interested in helping students to help themselves get the education they desire.

According to Wentz, state legislation is the most effective way of assuring that students' educational rights are met. To that end, the club in November attended a Governor's Task Force workshop in Yakima on public assistance reform. In addition, Wentz said that the club has been invited to attend legislative workshops in Olympia during winter quarter.

"Higher education is a big issue right now," said Wentz. "And the more student support we can get, the better our chances of getting state help. One thing I would like to stress is that we will really need club members or other volunteers during winter quarter to fill out forms to flood the legislature with requests for reform."

Wentz said that SERC is an offshoot of Women's Educational Rights Caucus at Yakima Valley Community College. The CWU organization was founded when she and Debra Heilman, president of the Yakima chapter, went to see Rep. Sid Morrison about sponsoring a bill in Congress to recognize the problems in relation to the educational needs of students with a disadvantage. SERC in Ellensburg has a membership of over 30, while Yakima's membership is about 200.

SERC is open to men as well as women. Wentz feels that it is important to include men in membership. She said, "We don't want to eliminate anyone who might be valuable in changing the direction of higher education. We want to accommodate the needs of all students. There are a lot of lower income men, too. Also, many men are returning to school at a later age." Wentz hopes the club will have an equally balanced membership by the time it really gets going.

Wentz got involved with educational rights when she felt that her own rights were being infringed upon. "I am a recipient of public assistance and won a scholarship," she said. "When I won that scholarship, my food stamps were taken away. That scholarship money should have gone to feed and clothe my three and a half-year-old daughter and pay some electric bills in the winter. Instead, they deducted it from my assistance. It made me angry that someone might try to trap me in a cycle of poverty."

Programs that SERC is going to work on immediately include expansion of the daycare program on campus and a book loan program for low income students who are members of SERC. They are also involved in helping to get the new book exchange started here at Central.

Other officers of the club are Kari Baldwin, vice president; Terry Toupe, secretary; Erin Decker, treasurer and Deanna Telford, assistant controller.

Although a meeting schedule has not been set up yet, the club hopes to hold meetings every two weeks.

In addition to the hard work and goals they hope to accomplish, Wentz also said that they would like to plan some fun, affordable activities for club members.

Students interested in becoming a part of SERC, or having questions or comments about SERC, can leave a message in the SERC mailbox which is located in the Scheduling Office of the SUB. Students can also contact Patricia Wentz by calling 925-4725 after 3 p.m.

"SERC has been a good support system for me. It has always been important for me to strive," Wentz commented. "I just want to prove to myself and others that a person can achieve even when there are a lot of barriers."

Other goals the WSL is hoping to achieve in this legislative session include an increase in state funding of all state universities with equitable distribution of the funds to all the institutions, the enactment of legislation to provide incentives and assistance for low income students to complete high school and to pursue a higher education, and the enactment of a permanent tuition installment plan. This would make it possible for students to pay tuition throughout the quarter and not all at once, as is currently required.

Nation commemorates activist's principles

ANALYSIS

By JULIE SEIBERT
News Editor

Monday, Jan. 19 is a holiday at Central, but more importantly, it marks the birth of civil rights activist Martin Luther King, Jr.

King spent his 39 years fighting for racial equality and he tried to convince the nation that social change was needed, but that the process of change should be a non-violent one.

Congress designated the third Monday in January as Martin Luther King, Jr. Day to commemorate these principles. In 1983, a bill was signed making Martin Luther King Day a national day of recognition. Last year it became a national holiday.

This will be the first year, however, that CWU observes the holiday. Barbara Radke, news bureau director at Central, said that last year no one realized in sufficient time that a national observance is not automatically a university observance.

Radke explained that the university schedule is set on a five-year calendar. Thus, when the schedule for 1986 was set up, Martin Luther King Day was not a holiday. Catalogues and class schedules had already been printed, making no mention of the holiday. Though many were upset that CWU did not observe the holiday last year, a sudden change in schedule could have caused just as many problems, Radke said.

Civil service employees and the CWU Faculty Senate were polled regarding whether they thought the holiday should be observed or not, though no official vote was taken. Early in the year, the university Administration recommended to the Board of Trustees that Martin Luther King Day be observed, and that recommendation was approved.

Radke explained that this approval changed the holiday schedule for the rest of the year as well. Normally, she said, both Lincoln's Birthday and Washington's Birthday would be observed in February. Because these holidays were so close together, often the university would simply celebrate President's Day in February and take an extra day later in the year.

With the observance of Martin Luther King Day in January, there will be no more holiday trading, and President's Day will be the one official holiday in February.

CWU is not the only institution struggling with the problem of whether or not to observe the new holiday. Many businesses will be open on Monday, though all state and federal operations have the day off.

King was assassinated in 1968, but it took 35 years before his ideals were officially commemorated. This perhaps is because many feared that his ideas were closely related to communism. Others felt that it is not fair to recognize King while ignoring other national heroes.

Or, perhaps, if we were to take a closer look at our nation we would find that we haven't come as far as we think in our struggle for racial equality and social cohesion in the last 35 years.

Computers key-off book exchange

By TIFFANY McCUTCHEON
Staff Writer

While most CWU students were doing their best to put thoughts of school out of their heads during Christmas break, Mike Little was busily working on a computer program that would be the heart of the new ASCWU book exchange. The plan he has devised eliminates reams of paperwork and the worry of misplaced textbooks.

In addition to storing book titles, the computer will also be used to store a student's name and the title of a book which is not available. The student will then be informed when the book becomes available.

The book exchange setup committee will be looking for a student to take the job of administrating the exchange. This person's responsibilities would include entering the data on the computer, organizing the books as they are turned into the exchange, keeping the list of available books up to date, handling financial transactions, composing the SUB board of available books and supervising anyone helping with the exchange.

The administrator would receive credits or pay or a combination of both for the work. A standing committee of five to seven will be appointed to assist the administrator of the exchange.

Duane LaRue, vice president of ASCWU, will present the final proposal for the new exchange to the board of directors at its Feb. 9 meeting. The exchange will be in operation by the end of winter quarter 1987.

Observer honored for efforts

By JULIE SEIBERT
News Editor

The CWU Observer newspaper was recently presented with a first place award by the American Scholastic Press Association (ASPA). Issues were submitted for judging last spring.

The ASPA critiques publications nationwide on such things as content, design, editing and creativity.

The Observer earned its first place award under Editor Jim Massey by scoring a total of 855 points out of a possible 1,000.

The publication scored exceptionally well in categories such as originality, research, general format, use of correct journalistic grammar and artwork.

ASPA judges commented, "It (the Observer) has a clean, crisp style that is found in scholastic newspapers that have a staff, editor, and faculty advisor who understand each other and work hard on the fundamentals of reporting and production."

Observer Advisor Miles Turnbull said that he feels last spring's newspaper staff was an excellent one and he's not surprised that their achievements were recognized.

Three other university newspapers categorized with CWU scored enough points in their critiques to earn first place awards. The other recipients are schools located in Florida, Ohio and Texas.

The staff is undecided about submitting issues for critique this year. Turnbull said, however, "I'd be happy to see us do it again."

We are now accepting student applications for the 200 tips from people in the area who heard or saw an airplane about the time the plane disappeared. She said every sighting was being checked out by Sheriff's Deputies or was included in a search grid for a plane to over-fly.

Crash from pg. 1

Tweedie said that a ground search was also underway which included the use of snowmobiles, four-wheel-drive vehicles and a patrol boat searching the Columbia River. In addition, nearby state facilities such as parks and Sno-parks were being searched by state officials.

The search area extended from Snoqualmie pass to about 15 miles east of the Columbia River, said Julie Cannell, a CWU junior working with the Washington Division of Aeronautics in assigning search areas to private pilots.

Searchers have received no help from an Emergency Locator Transmitter carried aboard the two seat, single engine plane. The ELT is designed to transmit a special signal when a crash occurs that can be picked up by search aircraft, a Soviet search and rescue satellite or by airliners flying over. Officials reported that no signal was ever received but continued to monitor the emergency frequency in the event it activated late or was turned on manually.

Friends and family of the two missing women expressed disbelief that such an accident could occur. They pointed out that both were certified flight instructors and had a lot of flying experience.

Karstetter had about 4,000 hours of flying time in about 20 different aircraft according to her father. Karstetter completed the flight program at Big Bend and became an instructor there. Some of the CWU flight technology majors received instruction from her before transferring to CWU. She is employed by Pacific Northwest Bell flying corporate jets.

Brockett transferred to CWU this fall after completing the flight program at Big Bend. It was there that she met Karstetter and they became friends. She has been described as an attractive and quiet individual.

The search for the missing pair is planned to continue through Tues., Jan. 13, CAP officials said.

Weekend emergency assistance

For campus police assistance and emergency calls from 7 p.m. to 7 a.m., Mon. through Fri., and 24-hours a day on weekends, students should dial 963-2958. Campus directory assistance will be available during these hours on a limited basis.

For other information regarding such things as long distance calls, billings, etc., students should call Telecommunications between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. on weekdays. This information cannot be obtained from campus security through the weekend despite rough terrain and turbulence at low altitudes. Two of the search aircraft made emergency landings over the weekend. One amphibious CAP plane experienced engine difficulties and made a forced landing in a clearing near Cle Elum. Although the aircraft was damaged, all three CAP officials walked away from the plane and were picked up minutes later by a nearby search helicopter. Another search plane made an uneventful emergency landing on a country highway when it experienced engine trouble, searchers reported.

Families and friends of the missing women were preparing themselves for the worst. Mr. Karstetter said of his daughter, "She was doing what she liked to do. There are worse ways of dying."

Likewise, a friend of Brockett's said, "She loved to fly. If she had to go...."

Student lobbies for education

By Mark A. McLean
Staff Writer

Central student John McDonagh has been selected by the Washington Student Lobby as the WSL lobbyist for the 1987 legislature. For the next five to six months, McDonagh will be in Olympia using every possible opportunity to talk with state legislators about higher education.

"It was all I ever wanted to do, to be involved in the political arena," McDonagh said about his political ambitions. His political career began as an honor student at Selah High School. He served as a page in Olympia on two separate occasions, once for a representative and then again for a senator. McDonagh is currently a political science major and belongs to the Political Science Association here at CWU. Serving as a lobbyist will be his internship.

'It was all I ever wanted to do, to be involved in the political arena.'

His duties in Olympia will be to persuade the 147 legislators of the merits of a WSL legislative package which includes increased funding for the state student financial aid programs, increased salaries for all university personnel, and state funding for campus day care facilities.

McDonagh said he will engage in "platform bargaining." That is, he intends to lobby for the program as one whole issue and not just for a few of the higher priority items. "You shoot for 200% and hope you get 100%," explained McDonagh.

Although he is not new to the state capitol, the experience of being a lobbyist will be a difficult and challenging task for him. The state representatives and senators are very difficult to reach and lobbying will mean talking with the legislators as they walk from one meeting to another or drive back to their offices, McDonagh said. In addition, McDonagh will be competing with numerous special interest groups for educational money, making lobbying all the more difficult. "Certainly I hope to accomplish something for the students. I am working for them. They check the little box on the registration form."

The ideas McDonagh will be pushing for will be slightly different from the proposals Governor Booth Gardner has made. The governor has proposed special taxes on select professions to help fund increased education spending. McDonagh fears the issue might become an issue of taxation rather than increased educational spending. "Everyone is in favor of increasing education," McDonagh said, "but they're not always in favor of increasing taxes."

Fitness fanatics slow to safe pace

By JULIE SEIBERT
News Editor

The start of each new year seems to produce a flood of fitness fanatics who want to lose the extra calories from the holiday treats and begin their new year's resolutions.

However, probably half of these beginning exercisers quit as quickly as they begin, most often because they jump into a program too quickly and wind up, if not injured, at least with painfully stiff muscles.

The first thing to remember when starting an exercise program is to start at a slow and even pace. This is becoming easier to do with the advent of a new idea in aerobic exercise, most often known as low impact aerobics.

The premise of low impact aerobics is to work the heart at an aerobic level, which means burning calories but not muscle, without the bouncing and jumping that can put undue stress on the joints.

This is usually done by using hand held weights of one or two pounds and making large, fast movements while always keeping one foot on the ground.

Often the most troublesome spots for new exercisers are the knees and the lower back. Any bouncing puts extra weight on these areas. Likewise, improper stretching techniques can also cause problems.

In particular, there are a few stretches to be wary of when exercising.

Whenever bending the knees in a squat or lunge position, the knees should be pointed directly over the toes. This assures one that the knees are not being strained in any direction other than the one in which they are intended to bend.

When doing deep lunges, the knee should always be positioned directly over the heel at a 90 degree angle. Any angle sharper than this can cause stress on the muscle and cartilage of the knee and can result in a very painful stretching or tearing of one or both.

A basic rule to follow to avoid injury to the lower back, or any part of the body for that matter, is "if it hurts, don't do it." There are some particular things to beware of, however.

For instance, whenever bending over toward the toes, whether the legs are apart or together, keep the knees, or at least one knee, slightly bent. Hanging without bending the knees causes lower back strain. Also, always bend the knees before raising the upper body from such a position for the same reason.

Besides being concerned about a safe workout, fitness participants should also look for a proper one. An exercise done correctly even one time is more beneficial than one done incorrectly 20 times.

Push-ups tend to be one such exercise which participants are inclined to perform incorrectly. Whether done on the knees or the toes, the body from the shoulders to the knees should be kept in a straight line, and the nose should be brought all the way to the floor. Even if only one push-up can be performed now, it's a start, and pretty soon that number will go up to five, then ten, 20, etc.

Basic stretches in which the nose is brought to each leg while sitting is another example of exercises which must be performed correctly to be of benefit. In this type of stretch, the back must be kept straight. In other words, no bending at the waist! The best way to assure a straight back is to keep the chin pointed up. It doesn't matter how far one can stretch, as long as it can be felt, not painfully, in the back of the upper leg. If, when performing this stretch, a pull is felt in the back of the knee, bend it slightly. It's not considered cheating.

These basic tips along with a good low impact aerobic class should provide a safe start to getting into shape. Most fitness organizations offer low impact classes of some sort. Remember that the old motto of "No pain, no gain," is an outdated idea. You're body doesn't benefit from undue pain and you'll stick with the program you choose longer if you enjoy it.

If you have any questions concerning your fitness program, contact your local fitness organization, or write to the Observer. I'll be happy to answer your questions, or direct you to someone who can.

Arson a possibility in second fire at 'Ranch'

By JIM LUIDL
Staff Writer

For those of you that came back to Central Washington with the expectation of tapping your feet at one of Ellensburg's favorite dance spots, The Ranch, you're in for a major disappointment.

At 5:17 a.m., January 1, 1987, the call came in to Kittitas County Fire District No. 2 that The Ranch was on fire. Thirty firefighters from District No. 2 and surrounding districts responded to the call.

The front portion of The Ranch was gutted by fire when a pinched extension cord to a video machine started smoldering in the southwest corner of the building. The fire quickly spread across the south wall and onto the ceiling. According to District No. 2 Fire Chief Lee Engle, the fire took only five minutes to put out, but the fire department had to tear out portions of the walls to put out "hotspots" in the building's insulation. The Ranch has sawdust insulation, due to it being built over 40 years ago when fire and building codes were not as strict as today. The fire got into the insulation and started to follow the sawdust along the insides of the walls.

All the contents of The Ranch suffered heat and smoke damage. Art Winn, property and building owner said that the heat was so intense, it melted neon signs and plastic fan blades at the end of the building where the fire never reached. Paint on the booths and tables bubbled, cracked, and blistered.

The building itself is in bad shape. The south wall is virtually destroyed, the sawdust insulation is lying in large piles in front of the building, the ceiling is charred halfway down the structure and the roof is sagging. The engineers who are inspecting the structure have not turned in their report yet, but it is likely that the building will be condemned.

The question now is when or if The Ranch will be re-opened. Winn said that question was still up in the air. He needs to discuss the matter with business owner, Evelyn Peterson, as well as the insurance company. The Ranch retained limited insurance before the fire. Winn would like to demolish the old structure and rebuild from the ground up, but that, to, is uncertain. Peterson did not have insurance for the business or personal effects and inventory that were in the building at the time of the fire. Peterson owns such things as cash registers, glasses, and the major inventory, beer, which was mostly undamaged.

Winn stated that demolition of the building or construction on new property has to start within 60 days. If The Ranch does not begin business by January 1, 1988, they may lose their liquor license.

The property The Ranch is on is not zoned for a business that serves alcohol. Because The Ranch was built before the zoning law was in effect, the building has a "grandfather clause" in its license that allows it to serve alcohol. If liquor is not served within a one year period, for any reason, the "grandfather clause" becomes void and the right to serve alcohol is permanently lost. The owners are under a tight schedule to

Tragedy as teen makes woman want to help

Chris Neil/The Observer

HELPING OUT — Evelyn Mills is drawing on her childhood experiences to help people who are dealing with loved ones suffering from mental illness.

By PHIL TAYON
Staff Writer

As a teenager, Evelyn Mills took on responsibilities that many of us will never know our entire lives. Evelyn took care of her mother who became mentally ill when Evelyn was 12 until her mother died when Mills was in her early twenties.

Mills is an education major at Central, and a teachers aid at Mt. Stuart Elementary. She feels there is a need to start an advocacy group for people in the Kittitas valley who are dealing with mental illness in the immediate family.

Mills watched over her mother for nearly ten years and became knowledgeable about the disease and its effects on the family unit. She would take care of her two younger brothers as well as her mother, then go to school worrying about her mother most of the day. Her mother has since passed away, but Mills still feels the effects of the disease clearly. Therefore, Mills would like to reach out to others who might be experiencing a similar situation. "I would have liked to have someone come to my side," Mills stated. Volunteer groups were of little help to Mills, and many people backed out on her in her time of need, "I learned a lot about people," she said.

Being a college student, Mills knows the feeling of leaving her mother at home. The problems did not disappear, and Mills felt she was still, "hinged at home." Mills feels that an advocacy group is needed for students at the university as well as residents of the Kittitas Valley who might be going through the same experience that she did.

According to Mills, people that she has talked to feel that such a group would do more harm than good, but also notes that these people do not understand how essential the support group would be to people in need of help.

People who are dealing with a situation similar to Mills' need a channel, she feels, that they can go through to help cope with the pro-

Rock news: Clapton, Miller deliver, and more

By TED ULMER
Staff Writer

With the butt-tingling Ellensburg cold now creeping into your fleece-lined longjohns, you're undoubtedly looking for ways to enjoy some of your more favorite indoor sports, (I didn't mean THAT). What a perfect time to indulge deeper into the world of rock 'n' roll! This notion will serve as the basis of this column for the following nine weeks, as we'll serve to keep you informed of what's new in the music world with the latest from rock's personalities and the music they provide.

Quick Bits

Hard rockers, unite! The Scorpions have just completed their "Monsters of Rock" tour and will have a new album out early this year. No title yet... The times sure have changed and here's part of the proof: Elton John, with little luck from his latest release, "Heartache All Over the World," seems to be experiencing one of his own. He and his 12-piece band are tapping down under with the 88-piece Melbourne symphony orchestra.

Twenty years ago this week the Monkees enjoyed a number one single, "I'm a Believer" and a number one album bearing the group's name. Lately they've also enjoyed a huge resurgence of popularity thanks to a video overdose provided courtesy of MTV... The new Van Halen (Van Hagar?) album, "5150," (which in case you didn't know is the police code for criminally insane) recently reached the three-million mark in sales

... Not to be outdone, former Halen frontman, David Lee Roth and his band of mega-talent musicians have an album out which is flirting with double-platinum status.

Love 'em or hate 'em, the Bangles definitely have some appeal. Their "Walk Like an Egyptian" has topped Billboard's Hot 100 for the fourth straight week, and their album, "Different Light," has finally broken the top ten after 50 weeks on the charts. Only four all female groups have ever had a single in the number one spot for three weeks. Available soon will be January releases by Deep Purple ("The House of Blue Light") and a solo effort from Foreigner vocalist Lou Gramm.

A song by an unknown band that is creating quite a stir is the Beastie Boys' "(You've Got To) Fight For Your Right (To Party)." You can hear it Friday nights on KCAT during "High Voltage." ... Speaking of beastly boys, Meatloaf recently did his first New York gig in five years at the Palladium. He's got a new one out on the Atlantic label, "Blind Before I Stop." ... Who do you remember from Men at Work? Probably Colin Hay, and not by his name, more than likely by his unique looks. His solo, soon to be released, is titled, "Looking For Jack."

Top Dogs

Ten years ago this week, Leo Sayer's "You Make Me Feel Like Dancing" was number one in singles, with Stevie Wonder's "I Wish" in second. For albums it was the Eagles "Hotel California" and Wonder's "Songs in the Key of Life." Close behind were Boston's debut album and Paul McCartney's "Wings Over America," which still both receive radio airplay. At number nine was Steve Miller's "Fly Like an Eagle," which brings us to our next segment ...

Hot Licks

The past year was a very interesting one for music. We saw the re-emergence of Boston, Bad Company, Kansas, Steve Winwood, the aforementioned Monkees, the Moody Blues, Eric Clapton, (we'll get to him), the very elusive Zamphere, and the equally scarce Steve Miller. Where in the heck has this guy been? Mercer Island is what we've been hearing. He couldn't have gone too far, since his latest, "Living In the 20th Century" was recorded in Seattle.

But where it was recorded isn't nearly as important as what was recorded. "Living In the 20th Century" did not immediately catch my ear, but upon closer scrutinization, revealed excellent production, blazing guitar, and a sound which shows that Miller has been able to keep up with the sounds of the '80s while still holding a bluesy-bop beat in his music.

Miller gives us his patented guitar work and sound in "Nobody But You, Baby," (his mentor was guitar legend Les Paul; you might have heard of the guitar?), a funky song similar to the title track. "Slinky" is just that; I could hear ZZ Top's Billy Gibbons doing something like this in another 10 years. Miller also gives us fine acoustic work in "Maelstrom," a song seemingly meant as background music for Gregorian chanting.

Side two offers a R&B approach with three consecutive songs that simply make you want to have fun. Stuff that reminds you of the Stray Cats, but with a harder edge and some harmonica thrown in.

All in all, this is a fine album, comparable, in my opinion, to Miller's glory years of the '70s. Out of a possible five stars, this rates not quite a four, but more than a three. A comfortable 3½ stars it is. I wish the Monkees could have followed suit ...

Next, another star from yesteryear, Eric Clapton. Here, too, is an accomplished guitarist giving it another go, although he has been more active than Steve Miller. Clapton has played with all the greats, Jimmy Page, Jeff Beck, et al, and even the stars of today (most notably, Edward Van Halen) cite him as a dominating influence.

If you want to know why this is so, listen to "Miss You" on side two of his latest album, "August." The mix on his songs is so clean that it's almost unnatural. The guitar?

It's extremely powerful, but you won't hear all the distortion that seems so prevalent on many other's work.

But this album is much more than guitar. Clapton seems to have a real affection for the brass. Check out "Run" and the first single, "It's In the Way That You Use It." There's even some funky synthesizer in "Tearing Us Apart," (a song that KCAT just recently added). "Take A Chance" is extremely soothing to this writer's metal-scorched ear, but sounds almost too close to the Doobie Brothers.

Although not quite as dynamic as Steve Miller's latest, it's an album well worth checking out. This metalhead gives it a solid three stars.

E.O.R. Briefs
Since KCAT is truly Ellensburg's

ONLY rock, we thought you might like to know what is currently being offered on our playlist.

For those with a flair for volume, Cinderella, David Lee Roth, Bon Jovi, and Bad Company. Also, Eddie Money, The Pretenders, Huey Lewis, the Smithereens, the Steves (Winwood and Miller), Eric Clapton, the Georgia Satellites, and Billy Idol. Up-and-comers include the Mighty Lemondrops, 54/40, the Bolshoi, Love and Rockets, and the Dream Syndicate.

The staff at KCAT and the ASCWU Programming Agency hope that you enjoyed the January 15th Young Fresh Fellows concert and pajama party.

The staff at KCAT also wants to tell you to reserve the weekend of January 30 & 31 because the monster is going to happen all over again. Remember Halloween???

End Notes

KCAT made Kittitas Valley radio history last week by being the first station ever in the area to incorporate compact discs into our programming. More music info next week.

tor of Financial Aid at CWU, David Lee, has said that he knows of families that have elected to keep their child out of school because they could not afford it due to the fact that they couldn't fight their way through the sea of bureaucratic red tape constructed by our friends in D.C.

But what makes me the saddest is the way that Bennett smiled on television. When he told a reporter that he most definitely would keep his options wide open when it came to political aspirations, it reminded me of a man more concerned with what he will be doing in the near future than what the college students of this country will be doing. The students are the only real future this nation has.

decide what to do because of these reasons.

If the insurance money comes through, according to Winn, the owners will be able to start building. If the money does not come in, no one is sure of what, exactly, will happen.

Ranch Catches Fire Second Time

In the early hours of Sunday, January 11, (between 6 and 6:30 a.m.) The Ranch caught fire for a second time this year. In the first fire, arson was completely ruled out. Not so this time, according to Fire Chief Engle. The reason the second fire may be arson, Engle explained, was because, ever since the first fire, the building has been secured and power has been shut off. The back and east doors of the establishment were also found to be open. Arson will not officially be declared until a State Farm Insurance agent makes his final report.

Currently, there is a sign on front of the building offering $7,500 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the guilty party or parties.

In an interesting side note, some bands that have played at The Ranch before have offered to do benefit concerts to raise any needed monies, or to start a fund drive for renovation. But, for now, the owners and the students of Central blems of a mentally ill family member because the situation is, "like a time bomb." The advocacy group would be that channel.

Washington University will have to wait and see if one of their favorite dance spots will re-open.

Mills feels that awareness of mental illness is essential in the Kittitas Valley, and that an advocacy group is greatly needed. The meetings, Mills proposes, would be informal and in a 'home setting' atmosphere that would encourage people to feel comfortable and more welcome to come and sit in.

With the help of some professionals in the community, Mills will be conducting an introductory meeting to bring people in who would like to help in anyway, and also for people who do not have anyone to turn to with their problems.

The advocacy meeting will be held tonight, January 15, from 7:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. at the Family Counselling and Service Center. There will be a guest speaker from the Yakima Advocacy for Mental Illness. Anyone is welcome to attend.

Thanks to Switzer, Bosworth will be back again

junior because he will be graduating this spring. The Boz also has a year of remaining collegiate eligibility.

It is a year of eligibility that Bosworth almost had taken away from him. It is also a year that I don't think Bosworth planned on using until it was taken away from him.

Let me explain. I think Bosworth was undecided whether to return to the Sooners or opt for the riches of the pros until he was banned from the Orange Bowl because of steroid usage. Bosworth saw the handling of this incident as one more example of the NCAA's hypocrisy and decided he had had enough of it. When Bosworth appeared on the sideline at the Orange Bowl wearing a T-shirt proclaiming that the NCAA is an abbreviation for "National Communists Against Athletes" and "Welcome to Russia," I felt it was the ever-controversial Bosworth's way of thumbing his nose at the powers-that-be, while at the same time, saying his farewell to college athletics.

Well, the T-shirt didn't sit too well with the press, Switzer, or the university president. So Switzer unceremoniously gave The Boz the boot.

Had Switzer met with Bosworth and gently told him that in light of the linebacker's recent actions, it might be best for everyone if he didn't return, Bosworth would have left for the pros with his pride and his bargaining power.

The issue here isn't whether The Boz should have been kicked off the team or not. The issue is the way Switzer handled it. By putting the situation on the front page of every newspaper, Switzer not only humiliated a player who had served him so well, he severely damaged Bosworth's bargaining position with the pros.

As it has turned out, Bosworth's public apology has put him back in Switzer's good graces and he has been invited back for his senior season. In the USA Today, Bosworth explained that he wants to shed his bad-boy image (he went so far as to say that he doesn't want to be called The Boz any longer) and finish his college career with dignity.

As it stands, it looks like Bosworth will be returning to OU a whipped dog, and for handling the situation so poorly, Switzer will have a stud linebacker returning. Something's rotten in the state of Oklahoma.

Brian Bosworth will be wearing a crimson and white Oklahoma football uniform next fall. The only reason he'll be doing so is because his coach, Barry Switzer, screwed up.

Bosworth, a two-time All-America and the winner of consecutive Butkus Awards, is eligible for the 1987 NFL draft as a

Nicholson in Pursuit of Basketball History

By BRENDA BERUBE
Sports Editor

For head basketball coach Dean Nicholson, known on this campus as the Dean of Basketball, the road to victory has not been a trivial pursuit. It has been a road of hard work, perseverance, prestige and patience.

The Trivial Pursuit card reads inaccurately now. The Wildcats 76-71 win over Northwest Nazarene, Dec. 12, at the Whitworth Tournament made Dean and father Leo the winningest father-son coaching combination in the history of collegiate basketball with 1000 victories.

The two are the first to ever reach the 1000 mark. Leo coached the Wildcats from 1929-1964 and compiled 505-281 record. Dean took over following his father's retirement. Behind them are Hank and Moe Iba with 910 victories and Ray Meyer and his two sons, Joey and Tom, with 838.

Personal achievements have also been great for Nicholson this year. With last week's 70-53 win over Pacific Lutheran, Nicholson became the 46th coach in collegiate basketball history to win 500 games.

The win came after three straight losses to NCAA Division I and II teams over the holiday break.

"I was disappointed in losing three, but I was glad the 500 could happen at home. We have a great crowd of students and fans. I was glad that they could be a part of it," said Nicholson.

"There's a great source of pride in

LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON — Leo and Dean Nicholson in 1965 — halfway through 1000 victories.

Trivial Pursuit cards:

- Card 1: What's Alice Starbuck better known as? (Options: NNM, ALL, BKB, BBL)
- Card 2: What offspring combined with Leo Nicholson to form the first father-and-son college coaching combo to accumulate 900 victories? (Options: NNM, ALL, BKB, BBL) winning 500 games like and 1000."

Nicholson has been bestowed with many honors over the years. He has coached 19 teams in 22 seasons to the national tournament. Last year, following in his father's footsteps, he was inducted into the NAIA Hall-of-Fame, and last week he was named to the NAIA's Golden Anniversary basketball team. He was joined by the likes of Jack Sikma, M.L. Carr, Lloyd Free, Terry Porter and Dennis Rodman.

However, Nicholson did not single out any of these citations as his own personal best.

"It's hard to pinpoint one particular honor," he said. "But from the standpoint of a personal best, if I had to choose, it would be my selection as NAIA National Coach-of-the-Year in 1970."

That was the year that he coached the Wildcats to their third Final Four appearance in four years and a second place finish.

"Awards, trophies, winning teams and good seasons are nice, but the bottom line is the working together with each team. The effort, sweat, chemistry, relationships and friendships, and the helping young people mature is what it's all about. The others are by-products," he added.

His attitude of hard work, competitiveness and dedication is reflected in the players he coaches.

"He never gives up. We can be five or six down with 30 seconds on the clock and he's looking for ways to win," said honorable mention All-American Ron vanderSchaaf.

Central forward Rodnie Taylor echoed vanderSchaaf's sentiments.

"One of the things that stands out is his competitiveness. He's very alive. I think it comes from his days as a player. He gets just as fired up as we do. I've said it before, there are times when he'd put on the uniform and show us how it's done if he could.

He's the most patient, considerate person I've ever met. I'm not just saying that because he's my coach. I've seen him interact with others," added Taylor.

But it's his reputation for basketball, as a coach and a teacher, and

Please see Nick page 16

Nick

the fundamentals, on and off the court, that he teaches that bring the players here.

"As a basketball player he's helped me improve. He's always on me to play better. He's a great human being and it's great playing for him," vanderSchaaf, the 6-8 center from Tiel, The Netherlands, said.

"First and foremost his record spoke for itself. At any level, to compile a record like his says that you are a winner," said Taylor of his decision to transfer to Central. "Also my brother, and my coach (Bob Anderson) at Juanita (High School) encouraged me to come here, because I needed the type of basic coach Dean is.

He also showed a genuine interest in me. He was interested in my welfare and cared about me as a person and an athlete," added Taylor.

"The Dean" has had a coaching philosophy that has taken him from his days as a player and then a coach at Puyallup High School through to today.

"I stress three things: We play hard. We play together. And we play good defense," Nicholson said. "Every athlete is tuned into their own personal recognition. In this game that can't be the dominate factor, it's a team game."

It has definitely been a team game. His teams have only twice failed to win at least 20 games. He has compiled a 502-187 record at Central and his current team is undefeated in district play and ranked 15th nationally.

Retirement?

It is more or less a taboo word in the Mecca of Ellensburg, Nicholson Pavilion.

"Certainly at this age (60) you know it's going to end someday in the not too distant future, but I'm not sure when — this year, next year, years beyond," Nicholson said.

"There are so many options: retirement, phase retirement, or to continue to work, but basketball will always be involved."

The words, "it will involve basketball," echo. Nicholson has made all aspects of basketball — and the art of passing that commitment on to his players — his life. Although he has been honored by the game Trivial Pursuit, he has not made the game of either, life or basketball, a trivial pursuit.

GIVE YOURSELF A HAND COACH — The "Dean" of Central basketball; assisting in each player's destiny and passing on the fundamentals.

Swimmers challenge Loggers

In collegiate athletics, when top teams meet, the contest is usually fierce. When the competitors are ranked No. 1 and No. 3, in the women's national rankings, and No. 1 versus No. 2, in the men's, the contest could be billed as "The NAIA's Premiere Dual Meet of the Year."

This meet will happen Saturday at 1 p.m. in Nicholson Pavilion as the Central men's and women's swim teams take on the University of Puget Sound. Both Central teams are ranked No. 1 in NAIA polling.

The Loggers are ranked No. 2 in the men's division, while being rated third in the women's standings. This is their first year of competition at the NAIA level, after competing at the NCAA Division 2 level last year.

Central and UPS have had an intense, even bitter, rivalry over the years.

"There is none (rivalries) better than the UPS-CWU men," said Central coach Bob Gregson.

Not to say that the women's meet isn't as fierce.

"Their coach (Don Duncan) has been at UPS around 25 years, and myself at Central for over twenty. We have a healthy, competitive relationship," Gregson said. "The UPS coach, I think, would rather win this meet than any other during the season."

Central's men received an early taste of victory defeating the University of Alaska-Anchorage 103-91 last Saturday. The 'Cats had only two individual winners to go along with victories in the 400-yard medley and freestyle relays. Aric Moss captured the 200-yard freestyle, and Terry Forrey the one-meter diving.

"They (UAA) had some very outstanding people," commented Gregson. "We won because of our depth, but they did have a good, competitive team."

"We are a long way from where we want to be right now," said Gregson of his team's performance. "We are swimming extremely tired, and I expect we'll be more tired this weekend."

Gregson and his crew are looking forward to a good meet with UPS.

Men's Basketball

After experiencing a brief tailspin, Central's men's basketball team is once again flying high.

Following an 8-0 start—its best since 1955—CWU hit some turbulence in late December, losing three consecutive games. But the Wildcats have gotten back on the right track with three straight wins.

The 'Cats began the turnaround with a historic 70-53 home win over Pacific Lutheran University Jan. 6. The victory gave Central head coach Dean Nicholson his 500th career triumph. On Saturday, CWU scored a 90-73 road win over Seattle University, followed by a 95-85 home win over Seattle Pacific University Tuesday.

The three W's raise the Wildcats' season record to 11-3. Central's District 1 mark stands at 5-0.

"We're playing better," acknowledged Nicholson. "I think we're over our shooting woes, and we're playing better

The Wildcats travel north for a pair of road games this weekend. Tomorrow (Friday) night, CWU tangles with Simon Fraser University, followed by a Saturday encounter with Western Washington University.

The 'Cats return to Nicholson Pavilion for a contest against the University of Puget Sound, one of the three foes to put a blemish on their record. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

After holding a 34-31 halftime lead, the Wildcats turned on the power in the second half, outscoring the Seattle U Chieftains, 56-42.

Nicholson said defense and rebounding were the keys to the strong second half. "We did a good job of applying the press and going to the boards."

After the Wildcats built a 10-point cushion, Seattle rallied to cut the lead to four, but the 'Cats used another surge to ice the District 1 contest.

Hot-shooting guard Tim Brown paced Central in scoring with 19 points. The junior transfer from Centralia College nailed seven of eight shots from the floor, including four of five from three-point range.

"Brown really had a good game," Nicholson said.

Ron vanderSchaaf had 18 points, Rodnie Taylor 14 and Israel Dorsey 10 for the Wildcats.

It was another strong second-half performance that propelled CWU to the win over Pacific Lutheran and gave the Wildcat mentor Number 500.

Despite shooting only 12 of 32 from the floor in the first half, Central still held a 27-19 advantage at intermission, thanks to some even colder shooting by PLU—7 of 19.

Central heated up during the final 20 minutes, connecting on 18 of 32.

After the Lutes cut the margin to 27-21 early in the second half, the Wildcats went on a 19-2 tear, part of which included a crowd-pleasing dunk by Taylor off a lob pass from Joe Harris.

CWU's inside game proved to be too tough for the visitors, as vanderSchaaf, Taylor and Tom Pettersen combined for 43 points and 27 rebounds.

After the game, Nicholson said he was relieved to put the monumental win behind him. "I'm glad to get that out of the way. Now we can get on with the season."

"I'm happier for our team to get back on track."

In a game that featured strong shooting by both teams, Central's offensive rebounding proved to be a key factor in the 95-85 win over Seattle Pacific.

The Wildcats held an 18-11 advantage on the offensive boards, and owned a 40-33 overall rebounding edge.

Taylor and Pettersen shared high board honors with seven apiece, while vanderSchaaf and Chuck Glovick each added six.

Despite the win, Nicholson was less than pleased with his team's defensive play.

"I thought our guard defense was pretty good. Our inside defense is atrocious."

"If we don't get tougher inside, we're never going to be the team we should be," the CWU boss added.

After SPU bolted to a 10-4 lead, the Wildcats regrouped and, thanks to some strong bench play, took a 35-26 advantage with 6:58 left in the first half. The Falcons rallied to grab a 39-37 lead with 2:55 remaining, but Brown put the 'Cats ahead for good with a layin and foul shot a minute later.

Central built its cushion to 20 points with a 16-4 run midway through the second half.

Harris led all scorers with a career-high 26 points, connecting on 10 of 14 shots from the field, including two of three from three-point land.

"I thought Joe played great," Nicholson stated.

Brown chipped in 16 points and Taylor 15.

Women's Basketball

Central's women's basketball team takes its 10-3 overall and 2-2 district record on the road as they challenge Simon Fraser in Burnaby, B.C. Friday and Western Washington on Saturday.

The lady 'Cats are coming off a five win one loss homestand defeating Simon Fraser, Oregon Tech, Seattle Pacific, Alaska-Pacific and Whitman. The only loss of the series coming from Seattle University.

"It's scary. SFU will be waiting for us, and Western's home record over the years has been phenomenal," head coach Gary Frederick said. "We have proven we can win on the road. We won six games on the road before Christmas."

New Year — New You

The season for ho, ho, ho, and eat, eat, eat, has skidded to a halt, and many of us are renewing that timeworn resolution to Lose Weight. It isn't easy, but with common sense and planning, 1987 can be the year for a New You.

Don't look at dieting as a short-term project, but as a lifelong commitment to better eating habits. A "good" diet is one that you could live with the rest of your life. Just as important as decreased calorie intake is finding a method of exercise that is enjoyable and can be done 3-5 times each week. Walking is excellent, even for those who are very overweight. The combination of decreased calorie intake and increased exercise will guarantee the fastest and highest quality weight loss (a loss of fat, not muscle or water).

 Next week's feature will offer advice on Getting Off to a Good Start. Until then, think thin!

Central's last meeting with pre-season favorite Simon Fraser the 'Cats came through with a strong effort and surprised the Clansmen with an 84-79 upset, handing them their first district loss of the season

"The big improvement for us was that we were patient and worked the ball around for some good shots," said head coach Gary Frederick.

"They just got back from a two-week road trip so they were tired," he added. "But that doesn't take anything away from the victory."

SFU had just returned from the Carribean where they won an eight-team invitational tournament.

Central converted almost 50 percent of their field goal attempts. Kristelle Arthur had 19 points and 10 rebounds in the victory and Kathy Alley hit eight of 14 shots for 16 points. MaryAnn McCord padded her team-leading assist total with seven.

Senior Kristi Wilson lead the rebounding with 16 and added 12 points.

Blue Mountain Community College rolls into Ellensburg Friday and Saturday for a two-game series with Central's women's junior varsity basketball squad. Tipoff for Friday's contest is 5 p.m. and Saturday's game begins at 2 p.m. in Nicholson Pavilion.

Central fell to 4-5 Wednesday dropping a four-point decision to Walla Walla. The Wildcats led by one point (25-24) late in the first half. But the Warriors scored the final six points of the half and the first 17 of the second half to build a 22-point lead.

Karen Curnutt led Central with 22 points. She is the season scoring leader with 94 points, an average of 10.4 per game. She leads in rebounding, averaging 7.0. Angela Elway is the leader in points per game, averaging 11.4.

Intramurals

Sixty-six basketball teams and an anticipated 20 volleyball teams begin the 1987 intramural sports season tonight in Nicholson Pavilion.

JV Basketball

The Central men's junior varsity team evened its season record at 4-4 after handing Wenatchee Valley College an 84-70 loss at Nicholson Pavilion Tuesday.

The basketball teams are divided into three different leagues. There are 32 six-foot and under teams, 25 open teams (six-foot and over combinations) and nine women's teams. The teams are separated into two divisions, Beta and Alpha, and will play a seven game schedule over the next three months in accordance with varsity and junior varsity home events. The three teams from each division with the best records will begin the playoffs March 9.

The intramural season will be interrupted briefly February 28 by the Schick Super Hoops three-on-three tournament. The winner from Central will advance to Seattle for the state championship.

Wrestling

The Wildcats take to the mat Friday night against North Idaho, the No. 1 ranked junior college in the nation, at 7:30 p.m. in Nicholson Pavilion.

According to head coach Greg Ford the team should do well, despite just coming off a long, hard roadtrip.

"I predict that we will do well. We always have been good against them," said Ford.

It was a long trip for the Central wrestling squad.

The Wildcats missed a game with Oregon Tech last Saturday night and then traveled across the border into California.

Tired from the trip from Oregon into California, the 'Cats could only place one wrestler, in the top spot at the Chico State Tournament despite a good performance.

The Chico State Tournament combined wrestlers from both NCAA Division 2 and 3, plus the top in NAIA schools. Central finished in the Top 10, Fresno State took top honors.

"We did well unbelievably," said Ford. "There were a lot of top class guys there from all over."

Top finisher for the 'Cats was Ken Sroaka placing fourth in the 142-pound division. Sroaka was awarded Wildcat Wrestler-of-the-Week for his performance. Sroaka won two matches by decision 10-7 and 19-4. He then lost in the third round forcing him into the loser's bracket. After winning three straight matches he met a 7-3 loss to finish fourth.

Eric Idler, also wrestling at 142, wasn't as fortunate. After winning his first two matches, Idler met with defeat. In the second round, Idler shot a double leg takedown, but the referee called the move out of bounds. In the third round, Idler wasn't awarded near fall points and ended up losing 5-4.

Idler called it "a controversial call."

"It was a takedown clearly, all the way," Ford added.

On the team's overall performance Ford said, "We won a lot of matches and showed to be good competition with the other divisional schools. We wanted to wrestle with the best in the nation (so) we didn't lose against anybody, we lost against the best."
