Melissa Wight serves up food at Tunstall Dining Hall.

Students finally given the power to choose what's on the menu

by Daren Schuettpelz
Staff reporter

Melissa Wight dips her spoon-sieve into the pan of steamed carrots, her hands covered with plastic gloves, and dumps a soft, orange load of vegetables next to a Beefadelphia sandwich.

With the creation of the Food Advisory Committee, the RHC has another medium for residence hall students to choose what they would like to eat at dining halls.

Director of Dining Services, Tom Ogg, said he takes comments seriously and encourages students to attend the committee meetings.

"Ideally, I would like at least one student from each residence hall," Ogg said. "It's an open forum to bring up concerns, both positive and negative."

Central student Alison Kinion was named food advisory committee chairperson on Jan. 12.

"If people have something to say, they should come and voice their opinions," Kinion said.

Kinion said some of the improvements she is looking forward to are a wider variety of fresh fruit and a convenience store that

BOD members evaluate student affairs their way

by Carrina Galloway
Staff reporter

This week the ASCWU-BOD handed over their evaluations of the student affairs division to Vice President Sarah Shumate but refused to adhere to her request that the evaluations be individual and signed.

"I was uncomfortable having the BOD, or anybody for that matter, sign evaluations that were going to the person you're evaluating," Steve Simmons, BOD vice president of student life and facilities, said. "If they go directly to Shumate, then she has the power at this university to act on these evaluations."

At the Jan. 8 BOD meeting, other BOD members expressed similar feelings prior to Shumate's evaluation. No BOD members would comment specifically on the exact content of the evaluation since they are usually considered confidential.

"Yeah, it'll be snappy," BOD President Amy Gillespie said.

At the end of the Jan. 8 meeting, the board chose to turn in one evaluation and sign it collectively. They gathered Jan. 15 in a closed meeting to conduct the evaluations which are to be turned in to Shumate on Jan. 30.

"We have decided to sign the forms," Gillespie said. "If we sign

"If I have to keep going back to them for clarity, then we'll need to come up with a different process."

one, we have to sign them all. We felt that it would be stronger if it was coming from a united front and unified voices."

Along with the evaluation, the BOD members will attach a letter

HEC Board investigates EWU-WSU merger

by David Henderson
Staff reporter

Eastern Washington University may merge with Washington State University in the near future due to a substantial drop in enrollment if the merger is approved by the Higher Education Coordinating Board.

President Ivory Nelson has voiced concern that Central could suffer a similar fate if student enrollments at Central don't increase.

"For the last five years Central's enrollment has been flat," Nelson said at a faculty senate meeting last week. "Five years ago we were over-enrolled by 740. We've reached a point now where our over-enrollment is only at maybe 50 or 60 students. If we had not had this over-enrollment, we would be in Eastern's position and that's a scary thought."

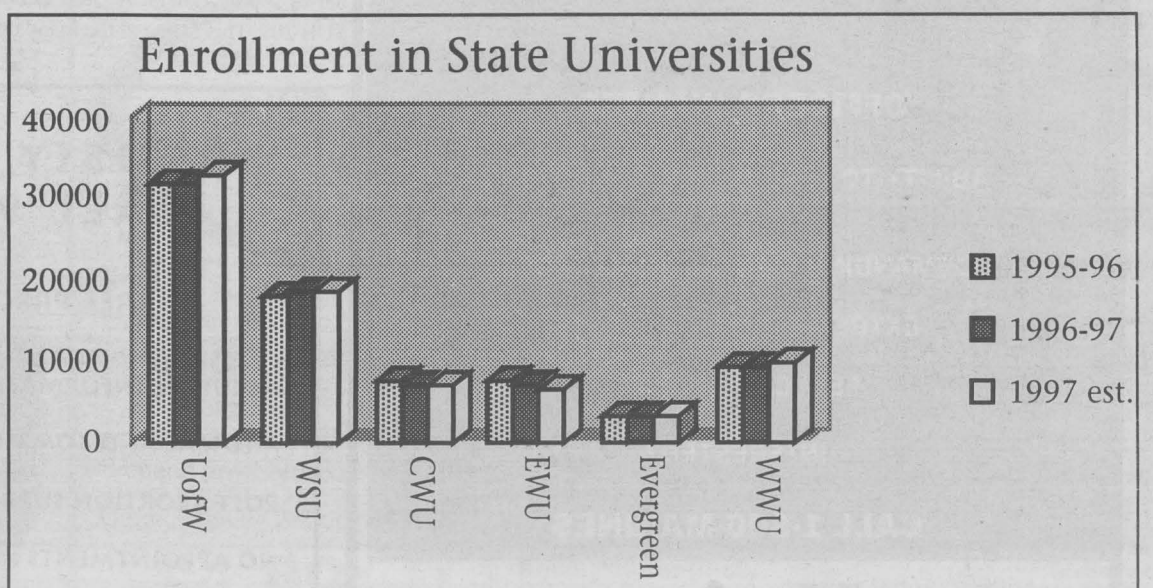

The proposed merger was first introduced by Sen. James West, R—

Spokane, who was concerned about the low enrollment numbers at EWU.

"I've come to the conclusion that having a single, public four-year higher education system serving the Spokane region will better serve the students and the community as a whole," West wrote in a recent letter to WSU President Sam Smith and EWU President Marshall Drummond.

Eastern's enrollment has dropped by 1,000 students over the last four years while WSU's enrollment has been relatively stagnant. Nelson said this, coupled with internal problems at Eastern including the loss of faculty and program funding, has led to the HEC Board's search for alternatives.

Eastern has also been given a warning by the legislature to raise enrollments or lose up to $3.2 million in annual state funding. In the past, the state legislature allocated funds to universities when specific programs needed it. Now, state dollars are being tied directly to student enrollment.

"Since Eastern seems to be fighting it at this point, the chances of a merge taking place would not be great in my opinion," Rob Perkins, faculty senate chair, said.

However, Perkins also added the initiative's chances of passing are increased because Sen. West is the chair of the HEC Board. Perkins said this could make the difference as he is respected by his fellow senators.

University 100 proposes changes for the future

by David Simmons
Staff reporter

Many freshmen don't like University 100, the mandatory advising seminar that began this fall.

"Everyone in my class thought it was a complete waste of time," Tara Sleeth, a freshman majoring in elementary education, said.

Administrators know this, but defend the class purpose.

Bill Swain, director of admissions, believes the course eases the transition into the university and prepares students to accept responsibility through their own progress.

Swain said the students should be introduced to some of the resources on campus, such as Career Development Services in Barge Hall.

"We want to make sure students have the resources they need," Swain said. "At least half of the students who take the course will save time by fully participating in the course. They're going to learn how to graduate in four years."

Some relatively minor changes will be decided upon concerning the structure for next fall quarter. Among changes the advising seminar committee are considering are adding peer mentors to the classes and decreasing class sizes.

“The information I learned didn't need to be taught because I would have learned it eventually.”

—freshman Joshua Lumsden, French major

Beginning in the fall 1997, all undergraduates who came to Central with less than 45 credits have been required to take the class that meets one hour a week.

The one-credit class does not count toward the 180-credit total, but it is required for graduation. It is taken on a satisfactory or unsatisfactory basis and must be retaken if failed.

"It is ridiculous that some teachers are piling on these hard tests and papers to write about the University," Nicholas Anderson, a freshman theater arts major, said.

Scott Carlton, associate director of academic advising, said the Faculty Senate, which designated University 100 as a general education requirement, claims the class does not have enough academic content to count as a credit toward a degree.

A syllabus for the class states its purpose: "The Advising Seminar provides [students]...with information and advice that will help them make effective decisions about academic courses and programs." Objectives as stated on the syllabus also refer to study skills, time management, University-sponsored activities, and involvement in the academic community.

"I suspect most of [my students] were dissatisfied with the class, but we are working hard to make improvements in the class," Linda Klug, professor of anthropology, said. "I think it has a real capacity to be an excellent introduction to college work."

Some students deny that the class has any significant value.

"The information I learned I didn't need to be taught because I would have learned it eventually anyways," freshman Joshua Lumsden, a French major, said.

Changes have been made since last fall in the class, including de-emphasis on creating a four-year plan and smaller class sizes.

The class was reduced to about 13 or 14 students to test the benefits of a smaller group setting.

COLLEGES: Future may be uncertain

This is not, however, the first discussion of a merger. In 1985, several attempts were made to merge EWU and WSU together, but the legislature decided against it.

If initiative to merge the two schools is passed, Eastern might only have to assume a new name such as "WSU at Cheney" and still retain their current faculty and administration. On the other hand, the two schools could also be completely merged and managed by one administration. The details of the merger will ultimately be up to the legislature.

WSU, which Perkins said he considers primarily a research-oriented institution as opposed to teaching-oriented Eastern, would be difficult to merge.

"WSU has more to gain in the merger than Eastern does because they would be able to pick up some of the programs Eastern has without investing the time and money it takes to build them," Perkins said.

Governor Locke requested the HEC Board make a recommendation to the legislature by the end of February.

Washington Student Lobby looking for support

by Michiko Murakami
Staff Reporter

Before Central students can register for classes on REGI, a computerized voice asks "Do you want to contribute $2 to the Washington Student Lobby (WSL)?" While some students understand what the donation is for and push "Yes" buttons, others just push "No" for lack of information about the WSL.

According to an informal poll conducted by the Observer in the SUB, 24 out of 30 students answered "No" to the donation.

"I don't see why I should donate my money to the lobby," one student replied. "They should tell more about what the money is for."

The statistics by the Central's accounting office shows approximately only 8 percent of students donate each quarter.

Students' donations go to the WSL that was founded in 1982 to make a way to reflect voices of public university students on the Legislature. It is a voluntary association, which consists of the student governments at Central, Eastern Washington University, Western Washington University, the University of Washington, and Washington State University.

“ The WSL has tremendous potential for power and influence in general. ”

— Britt Ruby

"Students' donations, which are given at the time of registration for classes, are the only source of revenue for the lobby," Britt Ruby, assistant director of the Office of Legislative Affairs, said.

On Jan. 12, the Washington State Legislature kicked off its 60-day session in Olympia, and sophomore Kyle Alm's mission as Central's representative to the lobby has started. His mission is to make sure that a legislative agenda, which was approved by the WSL, is reached in the Washington Legislature and to advocate for the realization of the legislative agenda.

"He is our representative who can actually talk to the State Senators and State House Representatives," Bruce Eklund, vice president for Regional Institutions, said.

The 1998 legislative agenda includes the creations of the Washington State Higher Education Endowment Fund, a sales tax exemption on textbooks, and a voting student on institutional governing boards.

"The WSL has a tremendous potential for power and influence in general," Ruby said. "The problem is that we just don't have students who know or who wants to know about politics."

Students who replied "Yes" to the donation are clearly aware of the lobby's activity.

"Since the student lobby runs completely by donations, I think it's important we support that activity," one student said.

Looking at the poor support from Central students, the Office of Legislative Affairs is planning to publicize more about the WSL. "The more we hear from people, the better we can do our job," Eklund said. Students' voices will be carried to the legislature through the WSL, and all students are encouraged to join the Washington Student Lobby meeting in the SUB every week. To get more information, call the Office of Legislative Affairs at 963-1696, or visit their homepage at <http://www.cwu.edu/~ascwu/ola.html>.

Now students have a safe, free ride they can count on

By Shannon Mai
Staff reporter

For students who need a safe ride home or an escort after hours, can now take advantage of a new program. The Designated Driver and Safe Ride Program is to provide students and guests with a safe ride and also for someone who doesn't want to walk alone at night.

Jack Baker, Director of Student Health and Counseling, and Art Krontz, Chair of Student Health Advisory Committee, are starting the program because students have expressed a need for a safe ride home.

"It's all about giving people a good choice and a responsible decision," Baker said.

The program will begin in Jan. 28, and will be offered from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. on Wednesday through Saturday. Students will be able to contact the program by calling 899-0394. This program is beneficial to students.

"It's free, it's confidential, and it's safe," Krontz said.

Students may have a voice on Central's Board of Trustees

by Tanya Dykstra
Staff reporter

Central may soon see a voting student on the Board of Trustees. Thirty-four states now have students serving on governing boards.

A list of three candidates would be presented to the governor from each institution. The governor would then select one student to represent each Associated Student Body as a voting member on that institution's Board of Regents or

B.O.T. The ASCWU president sits on the B.O.T. but does not vote.

"The Washington Student Lobby has been working on this bill for years," Kyle Alm, Legislative Liason said.

It has taken 29 to 30 years for the bill to get this far.

"We're finally really close to getting it," Alm said.

It is a short legislative session this term and there is no knowing exactly how long it will take, however things look optimistic. Bruce Eklund, Vice President for Political Affairs is hopeful that the bill will be passed soon.

"Ecstatic would be a better word," Eklund said. "He/she would have the same responsibilities as any of our trustees," Eklund said.

Eklund worked on the bill as a legislative liason last term.

"We drafted the senate bill 5517 without the amendments and passed it through the senate last year," he said.

Men welcome at women's center

by Karie O'Donnell
Staff reporter

The Women's Resource Center — a place for men? Central's Women's Resource Center opened in 1975 with a mission statement to, "educate, support and celebrate women." If Katrina Whitney, the center's new interim director has her way, things will change.

Whitney started her job on Jan. 2 and already has plans to make the center more successful.

"In order to be successful, we need to have both genders," Whitney said. "I really hope to create an environment that men can feel comfortable in, too."

The center offers resources and information on an extensive variety of women's issues including national scholarship information, a library with over 800 books and a lounge for studying, holding meetings or relaxing. Support services are also provided for victims of sexual assault and domestic violence.

"Not many people know what we're all about. We're open to anyone who wants information, resources or assistance," Whitney said.

The center is planning on hosting numerous speakers that will be of interest to both men and women. Some possible upcoming topics include, "The Art of Kissing" and "Go Girl: Women in Athletics." Whitney is also looking to create an award for "Men Who Appreciate Women," to be presented at the university's leadership awards banquet.

Whitney wants to create a more open environment for everyone.

"Whether you're a woman, a single father or a man looking for information on women's issues, the Women's Resource Center is a place for everyone," Whitney said.

For more information, stop by WRC in SUB 218 or call 963-2127.

will provide more take out foods. "We are looking into more vegetarian foods as well," Ogg said. "Soy milk and rice milk are being considered."

Other changes include, replacing the jukebox in Studio East with a video system, a pizza bar in Studio East and less prepackaged foods.

Ogg stressed there are other mediums that a student can make comments other than to the Food Advisory Committee. There is a website, at <http://www.cwu.edu/~dining>, comment cards at each dining hall and periodical surveys.

"We want to keep our system improving to meet student needs," Ogg said.

Kinion said if a student has an idea but cannot make a meeting, they can call her at 962-8805.

The Food Advisory Committee meets on the first Monday of every month at 5 p.m. in Studio East.

Initiative 200 targets affirmative action

by Stephanie Whitman
Staff reporter

Initiative 200, aimed at abolishing affirmative action, has raised some conflicting views and misconceptions about affirmative action in Washington state and at Central.

To understand how I-200 will affect Central, misconceptions of affirmative action need to be dispelled, say its opponents.

The purpose of affirmative action is to "open up opportunities," Nancy Howard, director of affirmative action, said. "We do all we can in our recruitment efforts to increase the number of women and people of color in our applicant pool."

This does not mean it gives minorities an edge over the majority.

"The reason affirmative action was going was that we didn't have an advantage in the job market," senior Arie Edward said. "It just helps

“ The executive order that initiated affirmative action says very clearly that institutions, agencies, that exist will not use quotas in affirmative action. ”

—Nancy Howard

(employers) to recognize that 'this is a black person who I might consider hiring because of their skills and opportunities.'"

Howard said that by increasing the number of women and minorities in the application phase, there is a better chance that qualified women or person of color might get the position, better diversifying the workplace.

However, affirmative action to open the applicant pool shouldn't be confused with fulfilling quotas.

"The executive order that initiated affirmative action says very clearly that institutions, agencies, that exist will not use quotas in affirmative action," Howard said.

Instead, Howard said they set goals for the number of women and people of color they want to apply for positions.

Even if affirmative action is abolished, Howard said that the university will still continue its practices in reaching out to diversify the employment pools as part of its contract with the Federal government.

The way affirmative action affects admissions is similar.

The university does have a section for race on its application.

This section is optional and is used mainly for demographics the state sometimes requests.

"Where affirmative action comes into play at Central is in going out and finding qualified students who then can be admitted based on their potential," Bill Swain, director of admissions and academic advising services, said. "We're going to try a little harder to find students who are members of an underrepresented minority who have not had access."

Swain also said even though students are admitted based on their grade point average, SAT scores, and transfer credits, they do look at how the student will add to the diversity of the student body.

President Ivory Nelson has also demonstrated a commitment to diversity. Nelson, along with the five other presidents of public baccalaureate institutions in Washington, wrote a letter concerning diversity in the schools.

In the letter the presidents say, "For public universities in this country at this point in our history, race and ethnicity are important aspects of this larger diversity."

Besides broadening students' perspectives and sharpening their minds, racial and ethnic diversity bring some very specific immediate benefits — benefits not just for individual students but for the society our universities serve."

Supporters got the necessary 179,248 signatures for I-200.

There are two ways the initiative can be passed.

One option is to place the initiative on the ballot and let the voters decide on whether it should be law. The other is that legislature can vote it in as law.

Tech programs accredited

by Emily Watson
Staff reporter

Central technology majors have a lot to brag about.

Two of Central's electronics engineering technology (EET) programs and the mechanical engineering technology (MET) program received accreditation from the Technology Accreditation Commission of the Accreditation Board for Engineering and Technology, Inc. (TAC/ABET). The accreditation gives students in the program a better chance for financial assistance while in school and job opportunities after graduation, says the programs leaders.

This accreditation is the first for the MET program in Ellensburg.

The program was started in 1989 and offers two options. One is mechanical technology which deals with experimental research, design, testing and product evaluation.

The other option is manufacturing technology which deals with production.

"Some companies hire students only from accredited schools," Walt Kaminski, industrial and engineering professor, said. "It will also allow our students to compete for scholarships, loans and other benefits."

The accreditation is just reaffirmation for the MET programs on campus and the Central degree center at Pierce College in Puyallup. It means that these programs are still providing a number of opportunities to make students better competitors in the job market.

The number of courses offered allows students to specialize in things like communications systems, control systems and microprocessors.

"Many of our students get a major plus a minor, which gives them an advantage in the job market," Tim Yoxtheimer, Central's industrial and engineering chair, said.

The MET program has approximately 12 graduates each year while the EET program has approximately 15. Many graduates go on to work for high profile companies such as Boeing, Fluke Manufacturing and Intel.

SHUMATE: Gillespie, BOD critique Student Affairs

Gillespie said that because the BOD are not employees of Student Affairs, their evaluations were based solely on meetings and short periods of time spent together, rather than on daily interactions.

Simmons said the situation was like evaluating a professor. He said professors don't see evaluations until after the quarter so there is no possibility of a report affecting the student's grade.

Because the BOD cannot turn in their evaluations after they graduate, Simmons requested that if they were to sign the forms, that they should go to more people than just Shumate. He suggested Shumate's evaluation go to President Ivory Nelson, since he oversees Shumate.

Shumate said she wasn't sure how she would use the evaluations considering their format. Ultimately, she said she didn't care what format they arrived in, she's not sure whether she will invite future student boards to evaluate her division again.

"I don't know," Shumate said. "It will depend a lot on what they have to say."

Shumate said her only motivation behind asking for the signatures was so she could go directly to the source if she had any questions about the content of any individual evaluation.

The evaluations will be of Assistant Vice President for Student Affairs Keith Champagne, Associate Vice President of Student Affairs Deacon Meier, Director of Auxilliary Services Rob Chrisler and Shumate.

Shumate said she has discussed ways to get students more involved in university affairs at recent Council of Student Affairs meetings, but the possibility of the student council evaluating Student Affairs annually remains to be seen.

If the evaluations don't help her in the annual assessment of the people she supervises, Shumate may re-evaluate whether the BOD will contribute again.

"If the information I get is so general that I have to keep going back to them for clarity, then we'll need to come up with a different process," Shumate said.

OBSERVANCE

I want your money

"Keep 'em dumb and keep 'em paying." I'm sure this has crossed the mind of more one administrator sitting around the big, wood conference table.

Two quarters after students passed the $35 athletic fee two questions remain. Why $35? And where is the money going? However, these questions also apply to two other hefty fees, the $40 Health and Counseling Center Fee and the $25 Technology Fee.

Historically, anytime cash is involved at Central the university prioritizes what to do with the funds until all parties involved are lulled to sleep. Not with these funds. When the well runs dry, the fees go up. Maybe that's because the only priority is getting more money out of students.

Together, the three funds add up to a lot of money, $90 quarterly. That is $17 more than the quarterly $73 Services and Activities Fee you're already charged as part of your tuition bill.

In the past two years the health fee has jumped from $15 to $40, but the quality of its service didn't rise with the cost. Back then, you received eight free visits per quarter. Now, you only get two visits, anything more will cost you extra.

The athletic fee is $35 and promises to deliver you hours and hours of fun. But that number was picked out of thin air and passed with absolutely underwhelming numbers. Athletic Director Gary Frederick didn't know how much he actually needed, but went ahead and grabbed all he could. Now, he boasts cash reserves. And the Technology Fee, its original cause noble, seems spread too thin to matter. "Computer technical support" has become a triaxial-paradox when uttered aloud on this campus.

This may be the first time in recent history the university didn't over-prioritize its intentions concerning money. It didn't have to. Unlike taxpayers, students just keep signing those checks, often without rhyme or reason. The worst part is, students keep voting for the opportunity to keep paying and stay dumb.

LETTERS

A back to school S&A primer

Dear Students,

My last letter to The Observer did not correctly explain the relationship between the Athletic Fee and the Service and Activities Fee. The Service and Activities Fees is mandated by state law and at Central comprises a $73 cut of your tuition. A committee comprised of six students and three faculty allocate the money every two years.

Before the athletic fee was passed by the students last spring it would have received $532,000 of the $1.75 million S&A fund. The $35 fee freed up that $532,000 for the other 38

S&A funded groups like DAPPER, KCAT, Women's Resource Center, intramurals and student daycare, student government and many more. If you are in a club, you receive funds for club travel. If the athletic fee was removed $532,000 would be cut from those budgets. The athletic fee originated because of a lack of funding from the state. Now, Central is no longer a state-funded institution, it is state supported, and less so every year. The legislature has cut its funding down to a mere 30 percent of our university's total budget, including self-support areas. Unfortunately, the students must pay for it. There is a benefit, though. Since more student dollars are used, students have more control over the money. Central has student committees for the Health and Counseling Center budget, the Technology Fee and Athletic Fee. Stop the rise of tuition and fees and declining state dollars. If you are a registered voter, call your rep. in Olympia and let them know you don't approve. (Register at our office, SUB 116.) For more info call 963-1693 or email ascwu@cwu.edu.

KCAT G.M.: Champagne a good boss

Dear Editor,

In response to Tim Yeadon's Jan. 15, 1998 article in the Observer, allow me to state my case. I'm surprised this is an issue, since Mr. Champagne is a non-voting advisor to the S&A Committee. To say that "just his presence is enough to sway some people's opinion about the budget" suggests the S&A Committee is incapable of making its own competent decisions about how to administer Services and Activities dollars. Perhaps Alyson Bolles as the S&A Committee chair can assure the committee advisor is not present during the future hearings.

In the meantime, to criticize Mr. Champagne for doing his job simply because of dissatisfaction with his job description, is without merit. That's the real issue at hand. After working under Mr. Champagne's supervision for 2 1/2 years, I have no reason to feel he is not adequately performing his job. His service as both an advisor and supervisor has been quite exemplary in my opinion.

I would like to add that KCAT's presentation last spring before the S&A Committee was ours alone. We did the research, we prepared the presentation, and we could have done it with or without Mr. Champagne's presence. Furthermore, Mr. Champagne doesn't prepare the KCAT budget, nor is he responsible for the daily operation of the radio station. KCAT is run by eight CWU student management members, 55 volunteer student DJ's and myself.

It bothers me someone would publish such a condescending newspaper article before exploring the possibility of changing S&A Guidelines and Procedures. Dignified and professional contact with university administration would produce more favorable results. Respect is something that must be earned, and I feel the Observer and Alyson Bolles could have done a much more commendable job toward this end.

— Chris Hull
KCAT General Manager

Email: Hurray for Ms. Bolles

Dear Editor,

Think about it...who appointed Mr. Champagne as advisor? He has presented himself as playing to both sides. Just ask both sides, (I'm laughing out loud.)

If there was any great planning behind appointing the advisor of S&A it would hold to the test of impartiality. (Oh, and that might save time and money too. Duh... it isn't rocket science.)

Just had to comment... The dysfunction among the student affairs units is now becoming evident to students. Hurray to Ms. Bolles for making a bold analysis and statement.

Plan ahead and prevent winter disasters

by Julie Helleson
and Toby Staab
Staff reporters

Cold weather and snow make a beautiful combination but to the warm blooded, this is a time when preparation and prevention are the only ways to truly enjoy this chilling season.

Central students often take for granted the amount of work involved in making this school safe and functional in the snow.

"We only have 10 people who work on snow removal," Jeanette Bryant, gardener lead, said. "We can usually get it all taken care of in one day if it's four inches or less."

We've all felt the frustration of stumbling along unplowed paths and walkways. The maintenance crews clear handicap areas first, parking lots second and housing/academic areas third.

"I think the school does a great job of clearing away snow, considering they are greatly under staffed," Kevin Stokes, a senior in paramedics said.

Another winter difficulty is driving in snow. Common sense rules the road as people are reminded to leave more space between vehicles and drive slower.

There are many things one can do to prepare for snow driving, like carrying blankets and water and thinking ahead by checking the pass reports. One tip to reduce the risk of an accident is to make plenty of travel time.

"I would suggest that unless you really need to go somewhere, stay home," University Police Chief Steve Ritteriser, said.

For those who love to ride bicycles, beware. Both maintenance and the university police suggest walking bikes. Too many people get hurt when attempting to ride bikes through campus.

Some people might want to stop by the health clinic to have a check-up.

"Don't be afraid of coming in for a check-up or examination," Celia Johnson, resident nurse, said.

Some of the most basic things to ensure good health are not always the most obvious.

"Get your rest, fresh air, exercise, eat well, wash your hands, drink lots of water, and generally try to stay clean," Johnson said.

Even with dropping temperatures and cold fronts constantly bombarding this region, people still insist on under dressing for the occasion.

It doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that hypothermia is not a desired condition. People need to consider that freezing temperatures are tough on immune systems.

"The most important thing we can do is protect our extremities," Steven Jefferies, professor of physical education, said. "Hats prevent the most heat loss, but earbands and gloves do help out."

Making sure necessities are taken care of saves time, money and energy, not to mention, it's great for peace of mind.

Swing into step with new class

by Julie Helleson
Staff reporter

Are you wanting to dance the night away, yet unsure about what steps to take or which way to turn?

The office of residential services offers the perfect answer with free classes for both swing and circle/square dancing.

The classes are open to everyone, regardless of age or skill level or whether you are a Central student.

The first swing class was held on Jan. 12. The second class will be on Monday, Jan. 26, led by Shantelle Ray from 7-9 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

"I like to dance and I was able to drag Phil (her husband) here, junior Kerra Young said after her first class.

The second session of classes will feature circle/square dancing on Feb. 2 and Feb. 9.

Chuck Soavey of Yakima will lead the lessons. They will be held at the same time and place as the swing classes.

"This is something we do annually to kind of replace the end of Monday Night Football," Erik Karl Tingelstad of the Office of Residential Services said.

For more information contact the Office of Residential Services at 963-1831.

Scene's fifty dates for $5

For those of us who continue to see only cobwebs in their wallets instead of money, here are a few ways to have fun on a date without taking out another college loan.

"When I am really broke I like to take a hike up to Wedge Mountain with my girlfriend," Tim Caudle, senior Ed. major said. Caudle is just one of the many students here at Central who likes to spend time with a loved one experiencing the great outdoors. With all of the great wilderness areas around Ellensburg, it is hard not to. "My boyfriend and I prefer to work out together since it is freezing cold outside," Tiffany Kesler, sophomore psychology major said. If a combined workout isn't good enough, one might consider a picnic in your living room. "When we're really broke, we just throw down a blanket in the middle of the living room, watch a movie and have hot cocoa, Michael-Paul Koontz, junior music major, said. The simple chore of grocery shopping can be an excuse to spend quality time with someone special. "Sometimes when I am broke, my girl friend and I go shopping and then make dinner together," Ryan Horner, senior theater arts major, said. "White Zinfandel is a nice cheap wine and goes great with any meal." For those of us with little taste and even less money, senior nutrition major Will Hicks suggests a cozy dinner with a can of spaghetti-O's, birthday candles, lawn furniture, and a nice domestic/generic beer to wash it all down. Some of us are so short on money it has seriously affected our ability to think straight. If this is the case, resort to the only possible dating technique there is, don't go out. "I'm engaged, so I don't go out on dates," Kurt Lukins, senior administrative management major said. Many fun experiences are out there for the couple willing to be creative. Here's fifty dates under $5 (give or take a few dollars) if you prefer the less painful approach to thinking. — Toby Staab, Asst. Scene editor ment at midnight and look at the stars. ($1.27 for a gallon of gas.) Travel East on I-90 approximately 30 miles (on the other side of the Columbia River.)

Beg your way into the Arboretum behind Dean Science Hall. Look for the desert room.

Go to Yakima. Walk around. Get bored. Go back to Ellensburg. Be thankful for what you have. $1.27 per gallon of gas.

Go for a nice walk and buy a red rose for your partner. (You should make a romantic card, too.)

Draw a hot bath, light lots of candles and drink hot chocolate together. This might be a good warm-up for a relationship, or a good ice breaker for one of those awkward first dates. Cost is between free and $3 (depending on how many of these supplies you currently own).

Rent: three movies for three nights, for $3 at RAC Video. With the choice of three movies, you could rent a number of winning combinations including, all of the Jaws movies, all of the Robocop movies, all of the evil dead movies, and almost all of the Police Academy movies. Located at 201 E. 8th, 925-6633. Open until 11 p.m.

Chicks dig foreign flicks, that's all there is to say. Central's Classic Film series is $2.50 every Tuesday night at McConnell.

Get some playdough and make Ivory Nelson busts. At Payless (700 S. Main, 925-4224) three canisters will run you about $5.

If your date is the rebellious sort, skip your afternoon class. Go to a matinee. At the Liberty (5th and Pine, 925-9511) it'll cost you card-carrying students $3.75 on weekdays and $3.50 on weekends. At the Grand Central (300 N. Pearl, 962-1993) it's $3.50.

Go to the scariest cowboy bar you can find. You might start with the First & Last Chance across the street from Dairy Queen (1200 E. 10th, 962-5999) for $1 glasses of beer and $1.75 pounders. (Rumor has they have the best chili in town.)

Get some watercolors/crayon and paper, go to a scenic spot and draw. Laugh and laugh and laugh. Hang them up at home.

Go to Vat Night at The Tav. This is for those mature 21 and above daters. Vat Night is every other Thursday. A domestic pitcher is about $5. Copy Editor Roxanne Murphy swears by it.

Play Monopoly, Life, Chutes and Ladders, Clue, Twister, Jenga, Checkers, Chess, Hungry Hungry Hippos, or Mr. Wiggly (stop laughing, it's a board game). You know what we're getting at. (Feel free to incorporate your own prizes.) Borrow the game, then it's free.

Head to Dairy Queen for Blizzards. Turn up the heat in the car full-blast. A small Blizzard is $1.39.

Borrow a cheap pole from that truck-drivin' neighbor of yours (yeah, the one with the baby and the loud dog). Go fishing. Bait is $3.

Have a redneck date. Get two cans of Jolt and two sticks of beef jerky at the 18th Street Deli (1801 N. Walnut, 962-3949). Beef jerky disks are four for $1, and for those purists, sticks are 99¢ each, bottles of Jolt are 89¢ each.

Go to the Sadie Hawkins dance on Sat. 24. Ladies ask the fellas for this one. It's $5 a couple and it's in the SUB Ballroom from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Visit Dick and Jane's Spot at 101 North Pearl. Forget the Yellow Brick Road, here you can stroll along the red sidewalk of love. Before you leave count all the reflectors that adorn the property. Best of all - it's free.

Take a drive up I-82 toward Yakima to the first view point. At night you can try to pick out constellations or find your house among Ellensburg's city lights. $1-5 for gas depending on the vehicle you own.

Take a tour of The Inn at Goose Creek. The ten different theme rooms should at least give you topics for conversation. Also, it's free.

Go mountain biking on the trails around the water tower overlooking the fairgrounds. Choose your date wisely, this one is for the physically fit. The only thing this will cost you is some sweat and maybe a few scratches depending on how well you ride.

Bowl the night away at Ellensburg Bowl. This can be a great ice-breaker for those of you on a first date. Whether you bowl a 300 or use the granny technique, this is a good time. Cost: $2.30/game and $1 per shoe rental.

Play pool at the SUB or local tavern. This is another great way to maintain conversation. If you don't like your date, you can shark them for all their money. It's only 30¢ a minute at the SUB or 50¢ a game at any bar in town. Bring your I.D. (they need it at the SUB as a deposit and you'll need it at the bars.)

GOOD LUCK!

Visit Ellensburg's old cemeteries. The IOOF Cemetery at 1900 Brick Road is within walking distance of campus. Turn left off Vantage Highway (by Dairy Queen) onto Brick Road. Follow the road up the hill 11 blocks. It's on the left. Look for Mary Shoudy's huge tomb. She's the mother of Ellensburg, you know.

Head to Don Pepe's taco stand near Cathy's Blue Lube. $1 per person can get you a good meal. You've all seen it on the way out of town. It's excellent.

Picnic at Irene Rhinehart Riverfront Park (Carey Lake/People's Pond — whatever it is called). Go south on Main street. Turn right at Umptanum Road (Red Robin is on the corner.) The park is on your right before you cross the Yakima River.

Go to Safeway's Deli around 7 p.m. Watch as they empty the fried-foods hot case and then grab the leftovers off the marked-down cooler for $1.66.

Every body loves ice cream. Treat yourself and a date to waffle cones. Try Winegars at the 18th Street Deli. $3!

Go poke around the Yakima River. Stop along the road. Pick daisies Find some trails. Throw rocks in the river. To get there, wander down Canyon Road due south out of Ellensburg (Main Street is renamed Canyon Road at the I-90 interchange.)

If you had known earlier you could have seen the Comm. departments "Flick Night" showing of "Harold and Maude." Future shows are yet to be announced. The films are shown on alternate Wednesday's 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Farrell Hall room 317.

Pick up two pints of Ben & Jerry's on a clear night, and watch the sunset from the Watertower. One pint is around $2.50.

Visit the petrified forest at Ginko/Wanapum State Park. The actual trees are mostly stump-sized and are hidden behind chicken wire, but it's still fun. Drive twenty-nine miles east of Ellensburg on I-90.

Looking for a third party? Spend $5 on gas. Drive to Yakima. Place a personal in the Penny Press. Wait.

Go to Safeway's Deli and buy a complete chicken dinner for two. Wipe the grease all over your couch for $3.99.

Sure it's too cold to get the mail, but why not hike to Manastash Ridge and sign the book? Some people do it everyday. Take Manastash Road then turn left on Cove Road. Go about 1/8 of a mile and follow the signs to ridge trail parking.

Take some free swing and circle/square dancing lessons on campus. Next class will be Monday, Jan. 26 from 7-9 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

Play pinball at the games room for 25¢ per game. The Observer recommends "The Adams Family." (Still going strong after four-plus years.) Skip "Fishtails."

Dye each other's hair. Choose your date's color. If you don't have too much hair you ought to be able to dye two heads with one bottle. Editor in Chief Tim Yeadon swears this won't cost more than $5.

Go swimming and/or hot tub at the City Pool for $2 a person. Hours during weekday's are 5:30 a.m. to 10:30 p.m. Weekend hours are 7:30 a.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Sing Karaoke at the Horseshoe on Tuesday and Thursday nights, 9 p.m. to close. Pick each other's songs. The Horseshoe is located on Third and Pearl.

Go to a club meeting you have not been to before. There are so many clubs to choose from you won't know where to start. Here's a couple: SALT Company (religious) meets at 8:30 p.m. Thursday's at 14th and B and CHEERS. Contact the ASCWU-BOD for a complete listing.

Stroll down memory lane with a classic game of truth or dare. It's Free. Please play this on at your own risk. The Observer is not responsible for your reputation.

Drink a six-pack of Rainier and watch the Terminator movie series. By the time you get to T2 the special effects should be really special. It's about $5 if you hit the right stores.

Grab a bucket of balls. Go to the Ellensburg Golf Course's driving range. (Wait until snow melts.) One bucket is about $2 or $3.

Drive to Vantage's Wild Horse monu-

Visit a pet at the humane society. Give some love to a cute puppy or kitty. It's free.

Try out all the furniture at Fitterers. Take turns asking the salesperson, "how much for the cardboard T.V.?" until they throw you out. Proceed to Shaw's Furniture (on Pearl) and repeat.

Visit Sarah Spurgeon art gallery, located on the first floor of Central's Randall Hall. It tends to house local and in-house art displays. Hours during weekdays are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Go to a Central athletic event for free. This costs $35 a quarter. Add about $5 for two hot dogs and two sodas.

Go park at the airport and watch the planes take off and land. To get there, grab Walnut at 18th Street and follow it north until the road turns right becoming Bowers Road. Continue until road ends. Recommendation: park at the turn-around past the gate.

"Women are more sensitive towards the feelings of others." Katie Fulton, sophomore, undecided.

"Women are because society expects them to be." Jan Tackett, Wellness Program Operator.

Who's more courteous men or women and why?

"Men because when guys try to meet a girl they have to be more courteous." Ardis Palawan, freshman, graphic design.

"Equal, because parents are bringing up kids to have the same values in life." Joe Scott, sophomore, human biology.

Common courtesy

Where has it disappeared to?

Listen Up!

Jessie Santos

I remember when people used to walk down the street and when passing a stranger, say "Hello," and get a "Hello," in response. Now, we teach our children not to talk to strangers.

I also remember when it was a 'proper' thing for a man to open up car door for a woman every time it was needed. With power door locks built in most cars now-a-days, it's a rarity.

What ever happened to common courtesy?

It takes too much effort to say hello because it would most likely cause a conversation that would cut into someone's time. I have no problem with opening my own car door because usually I do a lot of the driving.

Driving is another nightmare when it comes to common courtesy. Having so many rules and regulations that govern our safety on the streets and highways puts many drivers in the court system because of failing to use their common sense of courtesy.

During the 60s and 70s driving to grandma's house was an event that we all looked forward to. The games we used to play in the car helped to pass the time. If there was a motorist idle by the side of the road, it was a right neighborly thing to stop and see if you could possibly help out in any way.

In the 80s and now 90s, most drivers, I include myself in this category, use caution when it comes to our personal safety.

How can you drive and play car games with your children, when you see road signs posted on just about every major interstate route, that say 'Report Driving Violators' by calling on your cellular phone free of charge?

There are more people on the roads today with a vocal radar communicator. Some of these wanna-be-cops, cause more problems when it comes to road courtesy than the violators themselves. They speed in and out of traffic just trying to get the license plate number of the driver that is speeding and some other would be cellular deputy is pursuing the pursuer.

These chases usually will end up causing a cataclysmic catastrophe, and it is usually the cellular musketeer's who stand before the magistrate trying to explain what happened.

The grocery store is another place where common courtesy is lacking. Have you ever pushed an overflowing cart down an aisle trying to get to the checkstand and the lines are so long that they block the thoroughfare? I will usually say 'Excuse me please' and pull up just short of ramming my basket into the lady blocking the lane, which usually leads me to use either a louder attempt for passage or a verbal expletive, or most of the time, both.

During my time of enlistment in the Navy, I of course, did my shopping in the base commissary. There, I found arrows painted on the floors directing basket traffic. Most of the aisles were one-way aisles except for Frozen Food Lane and Meat Avenue. There were stop lines at every register, which allowed for other shoppers to pass.

Most of the time there were traffic cops (military personnel), directing traffic. Don't even let it cross your mind about getting into a 12 item line with 13 items in your basket. They count them.

What ever happened to common courtesy? The military got it.

It is always yes sir or no ma'am, saluting a passing officer, waiting for your turn in whatever line you happen to be standing in, and most definitely, obeying the base traffic laws.

It is too easy to get stopped for exceeding the 15 miles per hour speed limit, and a lot more convenient to conserve gas.

Speaking of gas, the gas stations on base follow the one-way traffic rule also. You will not find any lane crasher cutting in from the opposite direction there.

Common courtesy must come from within. 'Do unto others as you would have them do unto you', is the most preferred phrase around.

'Fallen' falls short

by Darcy Steinfeld
Staff reporter

If you want to catch yet another movie carried by big names instead of a good script, then see "Fallen". The writers had a good idea, but they fell short in the development of the characters and the plot. The story idea was intriguing but predictable.

"Fallen" involves a demon (or fallen angel) that can possess people and pass from person to person through touch.

This demon decides to stalk John Hobbes (Denzel Washington), a young homicide detective who recently witnessed the execution of a serial killer last inhabited by the demon.

Shortly after the execution, bodies start popping up, killed in the same way that the late serial killer liked to slay his victims.

In a strange encounter with a possessed man, Hobbes learns the demon is after him. The movie never explained why the demon wanted to plague Hobbes.

Hobbes gets help from Gretta Milano (Embeth Davidtz), a theology professor and daughter of a decorated policeman that killed himself under mysterious circumstances. Milano adds very little to the understanding of this demon and doesn't even help Hobbes get the evil angel when the time comes.

The worst thing about this movie is the chemistry between the characters.

I think John Goodman's character, Jonesy, was the most believable character, but he and Washington never really had any stellar moments together. Although they are partners,

www.wbmmovies.com

Hobbes' demon investigation is unknown to Jonesy.

The best thing about this movie was the font of the beginning credits and the "Seven"ish artwork. Unfortunately, neither the font nor the artwork had anything to do with the movie.

One kernel is more than this movie deserves.

Jack attacks

by Kurt Thomas

"As good as it gets"— Brace yourself for Jack Nicholson at his finest. Nicholson portrays Melvin Udall, a tough New York novelist who suffers from obsessive compulsive disorder.

Melvin is the person you love to hate. He is a sad, lonely, crotchety old man who just wants someone to love him.

It was not easy to fall in love with

www.wbmmovies.com

this type of character, but by the end of the movie I found I had been drawn in by his pessimistic charm.

This is a story of a selfish man who finds that by helping others, he helps himself.

Melvin's transformation begins after his gay neighbor is hospitalized after an attack by robbers, and Melvin is literally left holding the dog.

This unlikely "friendship" of man vs. beast is where Melvin finally learns to care about something besides himself.

Melvin later falls in love with his favorite waitress, Carol Connolly (Helen Hunt).

Throughout the movie, Carol is the optimism who counters Melvin's pessimism.

This movie was funny and serious at the same time. It showed that even the worst person can change.

This movie was definitely a four plus kernel movie.

With the release of the movie "Half-Baked" comes the soundtrack for the new comedy. On the soundtrack are songs from numerous artists from different genres of music.

Three songs in particular stood out to me.

The first song on the CD is "Along Comes Mary" by the Bloodhound Gang.

The Bloodhound Gang is remembered for their hit, "Fire Water Burn." "Along Comes Mary" comes on strong with loud, heavy guitars and an addictive bass line.

To top it all off, lead singer Jimmy Pop Ali's monotone voice makes it all flow together. This song has good transitions where the guitars are blaring loud, then stopping, then continuing all at once.

Smash Mouth hits us with another standout song, called "Virgin Girl." This song is quite a change for them, as opposed to their hit song "Walkin' on the Sun." "Virgin Girl" offers a fat reggae beat that entrances the listener immediately.

The lyrics tie in well and make this song one of the best on the soundtrack. This song is very Bob Marley-esque in style, and gets better as it goes on.

Coolio stopped by on this soundtrack and told us who, or should I say what, his true love is.

The song "(I'm in Love With) Mary Jane" has a catchy beat, similar to other Coolio hits. Coolio mixes his vocals well with the beat to make this song strong, and maybe even a potential hit.

This CD will appeal to many different listeners.

I would recommend it to almost any music listener. On a scale of one to five, I give "Half-Baked" a three-and-a-half.

again," Karen Gilmore from Seattle said upon check out.

Gilmore also said the color scheme of the hotel's "Antique Room" gave her a warm and cozy feeling.

Gary and Ylwa Mabee took over the hotel, located on Canyon Road near I-90, in November of 1997.

The entire hotel is decorated with hand-crafted furniture by local craftsmen, giving each room its own touch of magic.

The carpets in every room were made by hand. The woodwork around the hotel is flawlessly hand crafted.

"My favorite room is the Timber

Some of the theme rooms include: a Christmas Room, a Sports Room, and a Victorian Honeymoon Room.

All the rooms have a TV, VCR, refrigerator and a Jacuzzi tub.

"The room that gets the most visitors would have to be the Ellensburg Rodeo room," Gary Mabee said.

This room is designed with a cowboy motif and is great for people who enjoy western wear.

It has a king size bed with a cowboy and Indian iron bed frame.

The rooms are open for tours from 1 to 3 p.m. daily. The hotel has a conference room that can be rented out for practically any occasion.

Sports briefs

Josh Woodard, a slot back from Central's football team during fall quarter, has been named to the NAIA All-American football team as an honorable mention selection.

Woodard, a 5 foot 11 inch, 185 pound senior from Auburn, caught 41 passes for 450 yards and four touchdowns and was the third leading receiver in the Columbia Football Association. He finished his career as Central's fourth leading receiver with 132 catches. He ranks fifth in career yardage with 1,491.

Defender Melissa Sawyer and midfielder Liz Colgan have been named to the women's NAIA All-American soccer team.

Sawyer earned second team honors, while Colgan was an honorable mention selection. The two are only the second and third players in the 10-year history of the wildcat women's soccer program to receive All-American recognition. Darci Neil was an honorable mention pick in 1995.

Men drop two in Hawaii

By Mike Wells
Staff Reporter

In their final tune-up before the start of conference season, the men's basketball team dropped two games to nationally ranked BYU-Hawaii and Hawaii Pacific last week.

The 'Cats were undermanned going into the two games. Junior Tyce Nasinec, the Wildcats most versatile player, did not make the trip due to an injury sustained a few weeks prior.

In their first game, the 'Cats took on BYU-Hawaii. The men found themselves in a hole early falling behind 12-0 in the first couple of minutes of the game.

They were not able to rebound from the early deficit and fell 112-70.

Junior reserve Simon Dubiel led the Wildcat scoring with 20. Senior Paul Fraker chipped 17 in the losing cause.

"We weren't running our offense or playing any defense," head coach Greg Sparling said.

Things did not get any easier for the Wildcats, their next game was against Hawaii-Pacific which is rated as one of the top five teams in the nation.

Like the previous game, the 'Cats dug themselves a hole they couldn't get out of, trailing 54-30 at the half, enroute to a 99-56 defeat.

Senior Leon Johnson had a team high 23 points for the Wildcats.

"We're going to leave those two games behind us, and focus on the conference season," Sparling said.

A plus for the Wildcats is that Nasinec will be back in the line-up tonight when the 'Cats take on Lewis-Clark State College at 7 p.m. tonight in Nicholson Pavilion.

"With Tyce back, we can get back into our normal rotation," Sparling said.

Practice makes perfect: The women's basketball game against the Portland Saints was canceled last week due to the snowy weather. They play at St. Martin's Friday.

Wrestlers to host tourney

by Joe Bair
Staff reporter

After a couple of so-so outings last week, the Central wrestling team will have to be on top of its game if they want to survive this weekend.

Friday night Central will bang heads with fifth-ranked Southern Oregon University at Nicholson Pavilion before hosting the Central Open on Saturday. Highlighting the Open's 16-team field will be Southern Oregon, third-ranked Montana State-Northern University, eighth-ranked Simon Fraser University, and 11th-ranked Pacific Lutheran University.

"Friday night should be a tough match against Southern Oregon," Wildcat coach Kevin Pine said. "I don't think Central's ever beat them head-to-head."

"Friday night should be a tough match."

— Kevin Pine

Last weekend, the Wildcats slipped by Highline Community College 19-15 before heading south to Portland State for a tournament on Saturday.

Jack Anderson and Steve Gusse glowed in the dual meet against Highline. Anderson made light work of his 142 pound opponent with an early pin and Gusse looked equally impressive in his 20-9 win at 158.

After Friday's match, Pine and his team jetted down I-5 to Portland where they got a few hours of sleep before Saturday's seven a.m. weigh-in.

"It was a long night on Friday and I think that early weigh-in kinda got some of the guys tired," Pine said.

Although the Wildcats didn't place anyone, Pine saw some good individual performances.

"Anderson recorded his 20th victory, Gusse looked real good in his first two matches and then lost to a tough kid from Southern Oregon, and Ben Orth had a good match in the first round before losing a close one in the next round," Pine said.

Fund raiser brings hope to athletics

by Tim Booth
Staff reporter

After seven years working as the assistant director of the Cardinal Athletic Fund at the University of Louisville, Brett Manock felt it was time to make a change.

"This is a brand new position and whoever came into this job would be able to map out the type of program they like," he said. "At more established programs you would have to kind of do it the way they've been and don't have as much room for change. Here I can come in and do whatever I want."

The 34-year-old is Central's first director of athletic development, and is responsible for helping to raise funds for Central athletics. His initial goal is to raise $100,000 for athletic scholarships.

"Next season at Division II (NCAA) we'll be playing much tougher competition, and nearly every school we'll play offers athletic scholarships. Why would a student athlete come here when they can go to one of those schools and receive a scholarship?"

Central offers tuition-waivers for a percentage of female athletes to comply with gender equity legislation, but no financial help is offered for male athletes at this time.

While at Louisville, Manock was responsible for coordinating fundraising strategies for the $13 million Athletic Association fund. He coordinated auctions, golf tour-

Men's soccer returns via intramural action

by Tara Rattray
Staff reporter

Men's soccer made its way back to Central this quarter through intramural co-ed indoor soccer in the Nicholson Pavilion fieldhouse on Jan. 13.

"Since the men's soccer program was cut, it's nice to have a place where they can compete," sophomore Wendy Bunch said.

"It's pretty good competition," junior Chris Williams said. "The games are competitive and everyone displays good sportsmanship."

Williams, who plays for Booger, scored two goals in a 7-2 victory over The Kamola Krew last Thursday. Sophomore teammate Chad Sage led Booger with three goals.

Teams consist of two women and three men during each match. Competition is fairly even, with male and female athletes getting their share of hits.

"I prefer male competition," Bunch said. "It helps to pick up the speed and intensity of the game."

In other matches held Jan. 15,

Kris Clark defeated Tres Gordos 3-1, Jeremy Gonzalez and Big Gunzz tied at 2-2, and Jeremy Stipp fell 0-3 to F.C. Brad.

Matches begin at 7:15 p.m. every Tuesday and Thursday in the fieldhouse.

CWU athletes play for love of the game

By Jason Gaylord
Asst. sports editor

Athletes endure endless hours of preparation and perspiration and studies are undoubtedly sacrificed.

However, there is little chance of playing professionally and scholarships are few and far between.

Yet year after year Central athletes are drawn to the fight by a phenomenon only an athlete can understand.

This phenomena is pure adrenaline pumping desire. The desire is to compete, to challenge themselves, and be a part of something special.

"Being a part of the volleyball team has been a great experience, one I'll cherish forever," senior Mary Chi said.

"You need to be willing to put the team before yourself, play with intensity and work hard."

Only a chosen few are blessed with the athletic ability to compete as a collegian and even

"Playing sports has been a major focus of my life, I love the intensity of competition..."

— Senior Paul Fraker

fewer are good enough to excel.

From the first homerun, free-throw shot or touchdown pass, athletes dream of competing against the best. They dream of being the best.

"Playing sports has been a major focus of my life, I love the intensity of competition, the roar of the crowd, and the friendships made during a season," senior hoopster Paul Fraker said. "And when I'm older I will be able to sit down with my kids and tell them I played to the best of my ability for as long as I could."

For other athletes there is more than two-a-day practices, hard driving coaches, and the possibility of injury.

There is a chance to learn more about the sport they love. Although the chances of playing in the NBA or NFL are minuscule for Central athletes, many of them will go on to coach and the experience they gain playing at the NAIA level will be invaluable.

"I cherish playing baseball, it doesn't matter what level, I love to learn about the game," senior Pete Mirkovich said. "It's a huge step up from playing high school ball and what I learn while playing here will give me a better opportunity to coach someday."

If anybody has played sports, whether it was during grade school, high school, or intramural, they've tasted the nature of competition.

Competition can be a drug, playing your favorite sport can be harder than giving up a lifelong addiction to nicotine.

This lifelong fixation on dribbling a ball, creating a bone-jarring collision, or scoring a winning goal in the 39th minute is hard to walk away from.

Sports are spiritual. They are a chance to step away from everyday life and a chance to harness the desire to win.

"When times in my life were tough, I was always able to turn to basketball to channel my aggressions into a positive light," former CWU hoopster Jeff Foster said. "Playing basketball was an avenue to better things."

For CWU rodeo fans

The buck starts here

Central's rodeo team has added new members in an effort to get ready for the spring season

By Stephen Robinson
Staff reporter

Wild horses and wild rides took centerstage Sunday evening as the CWU Men's Rodeo Team began practicing for the spring rodeo season.

The men's team hopes to expand from last year with four or five new competitors.

The lone men's competitor has been sophomore Eddie Bromiley, who competes in calf roping and team roping.

Sunday evening's practice began with junior Brant Briody flying out of the chute on a wild bucking horse.

"It's definitely a sport that looks easier than it is," Briody said. "There's a lot of technique involved in holding onto a bucking horse."

The bullriders on the team did not ride because there were no bulls at last week's practice.

"Practice is all fundamentals, just getting your form down is important," bullrider Aaron Pascoe said. "I think you should buck out once a week, and ride a bucking machine two days a week, to keep riding fresh in your mind. It is all repetitious."

After the guys were done riding the horses, a few people tried chutedogging.

Basically, chutedogging is grabbing a steer by its horns and trying to throw or wrestle it to the ground.

Most of the steers weighed between 350 to 400 pounds.

CWU Rodeo coach Bill Lowe was pleased with the first practice.

"I enjoyed watching the guys learning how to throw steers," Lowe said.

Frank Beard and Arnold Longacre provided the team with horses and steers.

Anyone interested in the rodeo team is welcome to attend the meetings held at 7 p.m., every Monday in SUB room 208.

Snowshoeing in the Cascades: Backdrop for many expeditions

Mike Ferrari
Staff reporter

Hiking with conventional boots in the snow is an arduous task. Hiking with snowshoes is a whole different story.

Metal claws embedded underneath the bindings create an increased sense of traction.

Snowshoes allow hikers to climb mountainous terrain with relative ease.

World renowned snowshoeing expert and Ellensburg native Bill Prater gave a lecture and slide presentation on "Snowshoeing in the Cascades" last week at Morgan Middle School.

Prater, speaking on behalf of the Ellensburg Cross Country Ski Club, "rediscovered snowshoeing" while creating the Sherpa snowshoe.

The majestic Cascade Mountains provided the backdrop for Prater's many expeditions. Snoqualmie Pass and Mt. Rainier easily became Prater's favorite snowshoeing stomping grounds. Prater summed up his experience by concluding, "if you can walk, then you can snowshoe."

One expedition to the summit of Mt. Rainier presented Prater with his most harrowing experience. He became engulfed in a catastrophic avalanche there.

"All I can remember is waking up in a hospital with a doctor telling me I had torn cartilage in my chest," Prater said.

Prater thought of the snowshoe because he needed a way to maneuver around his farm during winter months. Prater and his late brother Gene went to work modifying the "the dinosaur snowshoe."

The Praters each purchased a pair of snowshoes from an army surplus store. The evolution of the Sherpa snowshoe commenced. Armed with endless curiosity, the Prater brothers modified their snowshoes in order to make the ascension toward the mountainous terrain.

The original Sherpa snowshoe had a varnished wood frame with rawhide laces strung across the front and rear fin. Pliable rawhide bindings snugly laced over any type of boot. Prater said using a special military boot made his feet sweat. Equipped with a double lining feature, the boots provided ample support and protection against frigid frostbite. The actual wood frame came to a point in the front with a fin in the rear. Prater said these bulky frames measure 50 inches.

Later modifications focused on reducing the length of the snowshoe and adding increased traction. Equipped with an aluminum frame, the new and improved Sherpa snowshoe exhibited a lightweight approach, compared to its wood predecessor. Measuring 2-3 feet in length, the rawhide lacing system gave way to a modern day vinyl type approach. Several metal claws were placed underneath the bindings. The rawhide bindings gave way to a more conventional plastic case model, while being built similarly to snowboard bindings. Once the foot is placed in the binding the boots are secured in place with vinyl straps.

There are several publications available to find out more about snowshoeing. Before his death, Gene Prater wrote a book entitled, "Snowshoeing." Prater owns a snowshoe shop located at 3740 Cove Road in Ellensburg. He can be reached at 925-1212.

ACCOUNTING APPRENTICE PROGRAM

The office of Enterprise Fund Accounting is accepting applications for the Accounting Apprentice Program through Friday, February 13, 1998. Applications are available at the Enterprise Accounting Fund Office located in Mitchell Hall, Second Floor.

Accounting Apprentices assist full-time staff in preparing financial statements and journal vouchers, auditing sales reports and systems, auditing and reconciling accounts, maintaining the campus-card system, reviewing billing system data, preparing reports and statistical data, and performing other related office duties.

To qualify for the Accounting Apprentice Program, the applicant must be enrolled at Central Washington University as a full-time student during the 1997-98 academic year and plan to be enrolled for the 1998-99 academic year. Applicants must be Accounting Majors who have completed Accounting 252 and one Computer Science class. A 3.00 GPA and personal computer experience (Excel) are desirable. Preference will be given to applicants who have related work experience.

Currently there are two apprentice positions available. While school is in session, apprentices are required to work a minimum of 15 hour per week, Monday through Friday, and full time (40 hours per week) between quarters. During Summer Session, apprentices have the option to work full time, or if enrolled for Summer Session, to work a minimum of 15 hours per week. Applicants must be available for employment through Spring Quarter 1999.

The starting hourly rate of pay is $9.13 per hour.
